Democratic congressional leaders last night agreed to introduce a bill into the Senate today giving President Roosevelt broad power to stabilize the cost of living, including farm prices and wages but carrying "guide posts" for the President in administering the measure.

"The bill takes in all commodities and all factors that enter into the cost of living and figure in winning the war," Barkley said as spokesman for the Democratic chiefs after their Sunday session.

While declining to reveal details of the bill or the nature of the "guide posts" that it contained, the Kentuckian made it plain that the bill would give the President broad discretionary authority, under a general direction, to stabilize the cost of living.

Wagner to Present Bill

The bill will be presented by Senator Wagner (Democrat) of New York, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, and by Senator Brown (Democrat) of Michigan, a member of that committee, in an effort to meet President Roosevelt's October 1 deadline. A similar bill, though possibly varying in detail, will be introduced into the House shortly by Chairman Steagall (Democrat) of Alabama, of the House Banking Committee, Barkley said.

The Senate committee will begin public hearings on the Wagner-Brown bill tomorrow with a view to ending them by Wednesday night. Barkley said the Democratic leadership plans to take up the bill on the floor of the Senate a week from today in an effort to obtain its final passage by Congress before the end of next week.

Agree on Scope

Participating in yesterday's conference, in addition to Barkley, Wagner, Brown and Steagall, were Senator Bankhead (Democrat) of Alabama, a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, and Representative Spence (Democrat) of Kentucky, Patman (Democrat) of Texas, and Ford (Democrat) of California. Dempsey Victor In New Mexico; Maine Votes Today

Former Interior Undersecretary John J. Dempsey won the Democratic nomination for Governor of New Mexico, late returns from Saturday's primary showed yesterday. Senator Clark A. Hatch and Representative Clinton P. Anderson won renomination easily but a close race was on for the second House seat.

Maine holds its general election today, almost two months ahead of the rest of the Nation, and Michigan's primary is set for tomorrow. (Details on Page 5.)

A 31-year-old Negro was held by police last night in connection with the hit-and-run death Saturday of Mrs. Freda Albert, 38, of 1627 B Street Northeast, the mother of three children.

He was arrested at his home, Jefferson Heights, Md., at 3:30 a. m. after an automobile mechanic and his wife supplied police with information that located his damaged automobile.

The man's arrest climaxed a 27-hour search by police which began when Mrs. Albert was struck and knocked 75 feet by a car which did not stop at Seventeenth and C Streets Northeast. She died before aid could be administered.

The suspect, a foreman of laborers at the Pentagon Building, denied any knowledge of the accident and said he had not been in Washington Friday night or early Saturday.

First break in the case came when Henry V. Morris of 521 Longfellow Street Northwest, an appraiser at the Stuart Motor Co. telephoned the Sixth Precinct late Saturday

Two weeks ago Miss Sable, slim and lovely but unloved on many dates at dances for servicemen, said she would like to know what was holding back the American doughboy.

An avalanche of answers poured in through the mail from sergeants, corporals, ensigns, lieutenants, second class seamen—and even several hopeful civilians.

Driving Curb Stage Is Set By Henderson

Tires on Cars Form Greatest Stockpile, OPA Chief Declares, Asking Conservation

Tires on automobiles of American motorists constitute a greater stock pile of rubber than that held by the Government, Leon Henderson, price administrator, said yesterday in a radio address.

He warned the Nation's 27 million motorists to cut their driving "to the bone." Unless this is done, Henderson declared, "we're likely to coast right into Hitler's lap."

The price chief's talk, broadcast to the Nation by the National Broadcasting Co., set the stage for drastic control of motoring throughout the country which President Roosevelt is expected to begin today by appointment of a rubber administrator. This new officer, recommended by the War Production Committee, will be charged with setting in motion the chief proposals of the committee for rubber conservation.

United States Rationing Proposed
Most far-reaching of these proposals was Nation-wide gasoline rationing, which cannot be made effective until ration books are printed, a task expected to require several weeks. Other proposals of the committee were that speed be cut to 35 miles an hour and that overall driving be held by rationing to an average of less than 5000 miles a year.

Interior Secretary Ickes already has ordered speed on United States highways reduced to the recommended maximum. Reduction of overall driving to 5000 miles a year would require readjustment of present quotas for "necessary" driving.

Henderson in his radio address yesterday reiterated his plea to motorists outside the East Coast rationing area to place themselves voluntarily on the same mileage basis as their "fellow Americans" in the 17 rationed States until Nation-wide control can be established.

Waste of Waste

He warned that the national rubber reserve is being wasted at a rate of one million tire miles a day, or enough to recap 200,000 tires, "in driving that makes not one single contribution to the war effort."

"That is waste that can lick us in the kind of fight we're in unless we cut the waste right now," he said. "If we lose this rubber

Total Control Would Let Laval Force Workers To Go to Reich

By the Associated Press

Vichy, Sept. 14.—The Petain government established today the principle of forced labor and total dictatorship over employment in one of the most radical laws in French history.

Every Frenchman between the ages of 18 and 50 and every unmarried French woman between 21 and 35—is subject to be called up "to effect all labors which the government will judge useful in the higher interests of the nation."

The law set no limitation on where they could be sent—although all ways and means of its application are not yet published. It may be applied also to foreigners who reside in France.

Every Frenchman—and probably every male foreigner—subject to the compulsory labor law must prove to the government that he is engaged in work "useful to the country's needs," or be liable to assignment to other work.

Employers' Rights Annulled

Every employer is forbidden to hire any workers unless they are provided by the Government Labor Service and with government authorization, which always is needed for firing or quitting.

The law contained a clause to the effect that "every head of an enterprise will be obliged to conform to the instructions which he may receive from competent secretaries of state, notably for constituting crews of workmen."

Infractions of the law will be punishable with sentences up to five years' imprisonment and a 30,000 gold franc fine, which will be doubled in the case of second offenders.

Pierre Laval, chief of government, was originator of the policy which he announced for "concentrating" industry in fewer plants and for stepping up working hours in order to "liberate" labor for war elsewhere.

Voluntary Plan Failed

IE. D. Ball, Associated Press correspondent in New York, said that Laval, snubbed in his campaign to coax Frenchmen into Hitler's service, had clamped the yoke of forced labor upon the people of France, in effect placing them at his beck and call for toll under their German conquerors.

This step in Axis collaboration came after the provisional French capital bristled with guns manned by troops and police called up suddenly over the weekend for mysterious "maneuvers."

Vichy officials had dismissed this martial prelude as mere practice, but Ball said it took on new significance.

Duchess, a Frustrated Setter, Mothers Infant Squirrel

All that this may prove is that even the worst break of a limb won't necessarily keep a good squirrel down.

This generalization depends, of course, on where the squirrel lands. And it raises the point of whether or not all bird dogs like baby squirrels.

Maybe Duchess, the 2-year-old setter, is just a good gal.

Anyhow, three weeks ago children came to the home of Mrs. Harold Hobbs, 302 Birch Avenue, Takoma Park, Md., and said:

"Here is a baby squirrel named 'Sweetie'."

Of course, it might have been something worse.

Mrs. Hobbs at once saw all manner of complications. On the place was Duchess who it might be presumed would love baby squirrels.

Duchess probably would love them best when barbecued, or baby squirrel fricassee. Also the squirrel had not opened its eyes, couldn't dodge setters well. But that's antipet problem.

The immediate problem was that the weather had turned cool and the squirrel hadn't grown fat. Mrs. Hobbs got out an electric pad, and dressed the squirrel in a

Months-Old Allocations Plan Still Kicked Around in WPB

By Ben W. Gilbert

(Second of a Series)

Last November 7, the old Supply, Priorities and Allocations Board "set its sights" for an "all-out allocations program" for critical materials. Ten months later, its successor, the War Production Board, still has not set up an "all out" system of allocations.

Instead, some WPB officials are doing their best to patch up the priorities system which was slated for the scrap heap exactly one month before Pearl Harbor. This patching is an effort to "make priorities work" through use of the Production Requirements Plan which was established on a compulsory basis on June 10.

"It will, of course, take a good deal of time to get the entire program into effect," SPAB frankly admitted in a press release on November 7.

"As it gradually emerges, however," SPAB added with a note of reassurance, "the program will give greater certainty to American business and industry; and it will also mean that defense officials will have a clear, over-all picture of the Nation's total requirements for raw materials, SPAB having previously authorized its executive director to get detailed requirements statements for the armed services, the merchant ship program and lend-lease."

The executive director of SPAB was Donald M. Nelson, now chairman of the War Production Board. Exactly one month after SPAB issued its statement, the Japanese See MATERIALS, Page 4, Column 3.

Scrap Plan to Be Set Today; D. C. Ready to Show Its Mettle

A specific plan for immediate collection of the District's metal scrap was to be formulated today at a meeting of the special Salvage Committee in the District Building.

The committee, headed by Col. Bevelly C. Snow, Assistant Engineer Commissioner of the District, is expected to start the collection wheels turning within a few days.

There was no doubt as to the District's response to the Nation's renewed appeal for salvage—there remained only the problem of collecting and sending it to the hungry steel and iron furnaces turning out war materials.

Bartovsky plays the piano at the Madison and L'Escargot and remembers his World War experiences "in the Russian army, whenever he looks at his St. Nicholas and St. George medals now hanging in the hall. He has a sister and two brothers now living in Nazi-occupied Odessa.

The award is made to homes with adequate air raid precautions where residents are making war bond and stamp purchases and where scrap metal, fats and other salvage is collected for the Government's war effort.

Emmons' son, Charles Delos Emmons, goes to Bancroft School, serves as a warden's messenger and has collected 300 pounds of scrap. Two of Bartovsky's children are junior warden's messengers, Fil, 11, and Martin, 10. Margie, 17, is a senior messenger and also works at Servicemen's Club No. 1 at Ninth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest.

In the same area, the V-Award for business establishments went to Miss Estelle Brown, resident manager of the apartment house at 3435 Brown Street. Besides arranging the required air raid precautions for the building, Miss Brown is a volunteer first aid worker in the Air-Raid Warden Service.

The awards were presented by Robert E. McCord, 3411 Brown Street Northwest, senior warden of Zone No. 1, Mount Pleasant area.

Reds Bolstered By New Planes, Tanks; Foe Hurls In More Troops

By Henry C. Cassidy

Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Monday), Sept. 14. The Russian high command said today that reinforced German troops had made a further advance southwest of Stalingrad, the second German gain announced in that sector in 24 hours.

Using almost the same words as in last night's communique, the midnight bulletin said the Germans had occupied "a populated place" to the southwest of the Volga City. The new communique said, however, the Russians were now holding firm west of Stalingrad where during the day a German advance had been acknowledged.

(The German high command said that German troops had penetrated the southern part of Stalingrad.)

Next Attack Is Contingent

The Russians said the Germans had brought up fresh reserves and were attacking continuously in the southwestern sector. The Red army withdrew, the communique said, only after it had annihilated a battalion of enemy infantry and disabled about 40 enemy tanks and destroyed 24 motor vehicles carrying troops.

"West of Stalingrad stubborn fighting took place," the communique said. "The Germans launched a number of attacks, which were repelled. On one sector six German tanks were destroyed."

The Russians also reported that the enemy had launched a new large-scale attack on the western bank of the Don River south of Voronezh, using an entire infantry division supported by 100 tanks. The Germans lost 2000 officers and men in killed and wounded, it was announced. Voronezh is about 300 miles northwest of Stalingrad, and is a key defense sector where the Russians have launched a number of counterattacks recently.

Foe Regained in Caucasus

Encouraging reports reached Moscow about fighting in the deep Caucasus, the news agency Tass stated that in the mountainous region near Moxdok Axis units were "withdrawing northward." In actions in this region Russian artillery, it was reported, set fire to 26 enemy tanks.

The midnight communique, however, said only that "in the area of Moxdok our troops, in fierce battle, with the enemy, destroyed 12 German tanks and wiped out about a battalion of infantry."

[The war bulletin, quoted by International News Service, said 413 German planes were destroyed over the Russian theater during the week that ended Saturday midnight, whereas Soviet losses for the same

Moscow, Sept. 13.—Dispatches from the front told today how a small band of Russian soldiers stopped Axis tanks rolling toward Stalingrad by filling their pockets with hand grenades and hurling themselves under the vehicles. Men and vehicles were blown to bits.

By their heroic deeds, 18 men, of whom 15 are dead and one is mortally wounded, held an onslaught by 12 German tanks, two platoons of Italian infantry and a unit of German automatic riflemen until reinforcements arrived.

Reds Make Arctic 'Commando' Thrust

To Stop Tanks Reds Make Selves Into Human Bombs

Moscow, Sept. 13.—An epic story of the heroism of Russian soldiers who filled their pockets with hand grenades and threw themselves under German tanks rolling toward Stalingrad stirred the Capital today.

Sixteen men, of whom 15 are dead and one is dying, by acts of sacrifice held up an onslaught of 12 German tanks and drove two platoons of Italian Infantry and a unit of German automatic riflemen to cover, the Sunday papers reported.

The 16 men, it was reported, held a vital sector northwest of Stalingrad and repulsed a determined enemy attack from that direction.

First they beat off Italian infantry which stormed the top of a hill.

The Italians were replaced by German automatic riflemen, who were subjected to a concentrated fire. The riflemen came almost to the Russian positions and were stopped at last by a bayonet charge.

Darkness brought a lull in operations, but at dawn 12 German tanks rolled into the field to charge the stronghold. The little Russian force had no anti-tank weapons, but the men decided to do their utmost with hand grenades and vowed not to be taken alive.

Hand grenades tossed in the orthodox manner blew up four of the tanks. But the rest came on. The last three Russians remaining uninjured then tucked hand grenades under their belts, stuffed others into their pockets and holding as many as possible in their hands they threw themselves under the caterpillars of two more tanks.

Men and machines were blown to bits. The remaining tanks withdrew and before they could resume the attack Russian reinforcements arrived.

The story was told by the commander of the little band of Russian defenders, Lieutenant Kochetkov. Russian reports said he is wounded mortally.

Chinese Retake 2 More Towns In Chekiang

By the Associated Press
Chungking, Sept. 13.—The occupation of the Chekiang Province town of Pukiang, 30 miles northeast of the provincial capital of Kihwa, was reported today in Chinese dispatches from the front while the Chinese siege of Kihwa continued without a let-up.

The Central News Agency said that fighting was in progress northeast of Pukiang.

Meanwhile, the town of Kufang, 8 miles west of Kihwa, again changed hands, falling once more to the Chinese.

A brief high command communiqué reported minor action in Kwangtung Province. It said the Chinese on September 1 attacked the Japanese at Tating and Newung, which is 25 miles north of the port of Swatow, and killed a number of them.

Japs Bombed in Burma
New Delhi, Sept. 13 (P)—Mandalay and Prome, Japanese concentration points in Burma, have been newly bombed by the R. A. F. with a loss of a single plane, it was announced today.

Prome and Mandalay are in central Burma. Rangoon, southern port, also was attacked.

A communiqué said that at Mandalay "tracks and trucks at the station yard were straddled with bombs."

"Despite antiaircraft fire, direct hits were registered on rolling stock and railway buildings at Rangoon, the communiqué added.

and asked what type of ornament had been found at the scene of the accident.

He referred to a nickel-plated figure of a mountain goat, a radiator ornament. Mrs. Hazel Morris, his wife, had remarked to him how the police were searching for a car with the ornament missing, and he remembered an auto brought to his shop for repairs.

With Lieut. William J. Liverman and policemen from the Accident Investigation Unit, Morris went to the motor company and the broken ornament fitted perfectly, police said. The front of the car also was badly damaged.

From the license numbers, police learned the owner's identity and address. He was held at the Twelfth Precinct station last night and will be questioned this morning. An inquest into the death probably will be held Wednesday.

Two men were injured, one possibly seriously, when the truck in which they were riding hit a telephone pole at Cherry Hill Road and the Baltimore Boulevard, Hyattsville, Md., yesterday at noon.

Winfield Hopkins, 51, Iceamy Trailer Camp, Hyattsville, was admitted to Casualty Hospital with chest injuries, cuts and bruises. George Rashick, 36, of Berwyn, Md., received a deep laceration of the neck and lacerations of the nose and right temple. He refused hospitalization.

Policeman Stephen A. Marshshaw, 26, of 333 Eighteenth Place Northwest, was broken toe sustained when his motorcycle struck a low-hanging platform on F Street Northwest between Twelfth and Thirtieth.

Land Behind Nazis; Hint Seen of Second Front in North

By the Associated Press
Moscow, Sept. 13.—A commando-style, sea-borne assault behind the enemy's far-northern line was reported today from the Barents Sea by the navy newspaper Red Fleet, which credited Russian marines with destroying 11 heavy guns, several mortars, two ammunition dumps and one food depot.

Suggesting that the Barents coastal operation was more than a minor hit-and-run attack, Red Fleet said that the assault was continuing. Admiral Nikolai Kuznetsov, Russian Navy Commander, messaged congratulations to the units involved.

An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Moscow to London said that the attackers also were credited with capture of 200 prisoners as well as enemy trenches.

Portent of Bigger Action
The operation seems to have been directed against German positions either in Finland or the nearby northeastern extremity of Norway. It assumes additional significance against the background of what the Germans have pictured as a great continuing air battle for position in that section along the Barents Sea, part of the Arctic Ocean.

Although neither side has interpreted the situation in the far north, the jockeying for position suggested the possibility that the area might become a major theater of action before winter prevents big operations.

(The far northern reaches of Norway and Finland, as well as the adjacent Kola Bay and Rybachy Peninsula section of Russia have figured in second front speculation.

Norway is separated from the Rybachy-Kola area only by the narrow tip of northernmost Finland. There were reports last week that Russian guerrillas had penetrated into northern Norway.

German reports of late have laid increasing emphasis on air action against the Russian far northern positions which are anchored at Murmansk on Kola Bay, a port of entry for supplies from the United Nations.

Base Attacked Saturday
DWB, official German news agency, quoted the high command Sunday as saying that a Russian air base east of Kola Bay was heavily attacked last night.

(This might have had a direct connection with the reported commando action since an operation of the suggested scope of the marine attack would hardly be undertaken without aerial backing.

The German high command already claimed, entirely without confirmation, that in aerial fighting in the far North on Thursday and Friday, Axis airmen, including Rumanians, Hungarians, Italians and Spaniards, shot down 171 planes.

(Among this number, the Germans said, were Curtises and Alcobras from the United States and Hurricanes from Britain—all fighters.)

(Neither side has offered an explanation of the concentrations of air power—in what has been a relatively quiescent war zone.)

Law Support Urged

The Maryland District of Columbia C. I. O. Council yesterday urged Senators and Representatives to support legislation activating the anti-inflation program of President Roosevelt as outlined in his Labor Day speech.

Forced Labor Decried for Frenchmen

nificance after disclosure of the government's startling action. Laval was playing with dynamite and knew it, Ball added.

This followed the government drive to send workmen to Germany to "relieve" war prisoners from rural districts to be repatriated in a one-to-three ratio for the number of skilled workers included among those sent to Germany.

Thus far only one trainload of "relieved" prisoners has arrived in France, although another has been announced.

A demand which found its way in print in the Paris press was put forward that the War Department "remobilize" the skilled workers the army left in factories and send them to Germany. The government balked at the proposal.

The present campaign is to send workmen to Germany in crews with measures contemplated to send them for fixed periods, at the end of which they would be relieved by other crews from the same French factory or not to be assumed, however, that workmen drafted under the present law would be shipped to Germany.

It was quite possible that the draft would be the workman's alternative to going there. In this regard, the clause requiring able-bodied adult males to prove that they were doing "useful work" was a logical pendant to the draft itself.

The expression "interests of the nation," as a determining one, however, appeared in the Constitution of the Vichy Legion. The legionnaires may be sent wherever these interests are involved.

Import Acknowledged
Semi-official comment distributed tonight by the French information office frankly acknowledged the import of the new law.

"The discipline imposed on the labor world demands sacrifices on its part of any extent, which the government does not ignore," said one commentator.

"But even more serious measures have been taken in other countries of very recent date; the present law will permit us to prevent their being extended to us."

"All Frenchmen should understand that the effort asked of them today is indispensable to meet hard necessities—national as well as international—which the French people have placed them face to face with."

Fighting French Comment
London, Sept. 13 (P)—Fighting French sources said tonight that Pierre Laval's plan to conscript labor in France appeared to be a camouflaged move under which workmen would be sent "collectively" to Germany to work in Nazi war industries.

These sources said Laval's plan was to provide Germany with 350,000 workers on a voluntary basis had been a "ghastly blunder," and as a result, he was obliged to turn to a new scheme for forced labor.

They said it was doubtful whether such conscripted labor could be employed in France to Germany's advantage, because Laval already had closed many factories and the munitions-making machinery had been shipped to Germany.

period were 281 planes.]

Sixty more German tanks were disabled in one sector southwest of Stalingrad and heavy losses inflicted on the enemy, the high command said. This was in addition to the 40 disabled in the sector where the Germans advanced.

Reds Get More Machines

The Russians were counting heavily on fresh air force, tank and artillery units which the Soviet command managed to move into the fighting zone. These additions offset to a degree the superiority in men and equipment the Germans had thrown around the Russian industrial city in a vast semicircle to the north, west and south.

The fresh Russian combat fliers were particularly successful in inflicting punishing losses on the invaders, it was stated by reports from the front. Many of the Red fliers were turned loose as individual hunters.

The army newspaper Red Star reported that in three weeks these lone wolves of the sky have destroyed 51 German planes and have caused great confusion among enemy tank formations.

To the west of the city, where another community had fallen to the Germans, a great tank battle was raging. Into this action the Russians had thrown more than 100 machines and the government newspaper Izvestia said German tank forces returned after the initial collision.

The fields were strewn with wrecked German tanks, Izvestia added, and it was estimated that Russian tank crews had killed 600 of the enemy by gunfire and by crushing them under the caterpillar treads of their machines.

Constantly Counterattacking

The Russians worried the Germans with a quick succession of small-scale actions. Counterattacks was an essential part of their defense strategy. The Axis forces were able to neglect no sector and no part of the front could be counted on to remain inactive any length of time.

Another feature of the savage fighting was the extraordinary strength of Russian artillery. West of Stalingrad, Red Star reported, Russian artillery repulsed four assaults by infantry and tanks. Two companies of enemy infantry were "wiped out" in this operation, front reports said.

While Stalingrad remained the focal point of an important battle little less violent was raging near Sinyavino in the Volkhov sector east of Leningrad.

In this area, Russian press dispatches said, the Germans were fighting desperately to cling to a stretch of about 13 miles of the Leningrad-Vologda railway. It would be of considerable importance to be besieged Leningrad, and the Germans have fortified their positions in the region with an elaborate system of trenches and machine-gun emplacements. The Russians reported the capture of several fortified points.

Russian attacks in the Sinyavino sector at one place involved crossing a swamp which the Germans were said to have regarded as impassable. Infantry crossed the marshy terrain over a log road built in a single night. One enemy garrison, other press dispatches reported, and the Germans were reported to be attempting to relieve it by delivering supplies and reinforcement by plane.

At the extremities of the front, weather was aiding the Russians. East of Leningrad rains were softening roads. In the Caucasian mountains snow was falling, causing some commentators to speculate on whether the German withdrawal northward near Baku meant the Axis had given up hope of reaching the Caspian Sea in that region before winter.

Soviet Reports Bulgar Troops In Open Revolt

London, Sept. 14 (Monday)—(DWB).

A new wave of disorders in Italy was declared by Soviet sources today to have alarmed Hitler, while other reports said an open anti-Axis revolt in eastern Macedonia had spread to Bulgarian troops occupying that territory.

A Russian dispatch from Lisbon, broadcast by Moscow, said Hitler held an emergency conference at his eastern front headquarters with leaders of the Italian fascist militia, Lieut. Gen. Galiberti and Gen. Guis.

This meeting was said to have framed measures for the stern suppression of "grave disturbances in various parts of southern and central Italy."

In Rome, conferences were said to have been held between officials of the Italian Propaganda Ministry and commanders of blackshirt militia battalions on one side and representatives of the German armed forces stationed in Italy on the other.

The Soviet source said that a close checkup of officers and men in the blackshirt detachments has been launched to test their reliability and eliminate anti-German elements from their midst.

Advices from Stockholm, meanwhile, told of a "complete revolt" aided by the Russian air force with parachute provisions, reported raging in eastern Macedonia, torn from Greece and given to Bulgaria.

The London Daily Express said it was reported in Ankara, capital of Turkey, that the Macedonian uprisings had become "so grave that they have spread into the Bulgarian army."

Several Bulgarian regiments, in whose ranks many officers and men favored Russia, were said to have been disbanded, and hundreds of the officers and men arrested.

Bulgaria, an ally of Hitler, is at war with the United States and Britain, but has never dared declare war on Russia because of friendship toward the Soviet Union held by the majority of the Bulgarian people.

A state of siege was reported to have been proclaimed in the Macedonian city of Skopje and the surrounding region. Revolutionary groups, the Stockholm reports related, were "terrorizing the population," with the Russians providing them with ammunition and food by parachute.

Several Bulgarian officials were reported assassinated followed by severe reprisals against the Macedonians.

General's Wound Severe

Berlin (From German Broadcast), Sept. 13 (P)—Complications from arm wounds suffered while inspecting front-line positions have delayed the return of Col. Gen. Gustav Jany, commander of the Hungarian troops in Russia, to his headquarters, a dispatch from Budapest reported tonight.

Valor Award Reveals How Flying Fortress, Other Bomber Felled 7 of 15 Jap Attackers

The impressive account of a "Flying Fortress" and another Army bomber shooting down seven out of a swarm of 15 Japanese fighter planes which sought to avenge them from their target was related yesterday by the War Department.

The feat, further evidence of the defensive power which these aircraft have been displaying on the fighting fronts, occurred last January in the Netherlands Indies but was disclosed only with announcement of the award of a Distinguished Flying Cross to the pilot of the Flying Fortress, Lieut. Col. Conrad F. Necrason of Coopersburg, N. Y., for his "coolness and courage."

Necrason accompanied another bomber, its type not specified, in an attack on Japanese ships off the island of Celebes, sinking a transport.

"While still over the target," the announcement related, "the two bombers were attacked by 15 enemy fighters, seven of which were shot down. The two bombers then proceeded to a refueling base."

But Necrason had two more brushes with the foe that day.

Foe Strides Field
Lieutenant Colonel Necrason had just finished servicing his ship, the account continued, "when five enemy aircraft began strafing their field. He took off in the face of the attack and when he returned later to see if he could be of assistance to his comrades, found the other bomber had been destroyed before it could be refueled.

"He then returned to his base in Java despite a subsequent attack by enemy fighters."

Another bomber feat, in which Japanese shipping was successfully raided off the Philippines last December "in the face of intense enemy fighter plane activity," won an oak leaf cluster, the equivalent of a second Distinguished Flying Cross, for Major Guildford R. Montgomery of Orlinda, S. Dak.

"He took off first during an air raid alarm at Clark Field without his co-pilot," the announcement recounted, "bombed his designated target and returned for more fuel and bombs. He then successfully completed another mission. He was in the air for nearly 13 hours during that one day."

11 Other Fliers Awarded

Announcement also was made of awards to 11 other Army fliers who fought against overwhelming odds in the Southwest Pacific, including Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton of San Antonio, Tex., now American air commander in Egypt.

One of these, First Lieut. Robert Taylor Hanson of Oakland, Calif., was killed in the Philippines two days after the action for which he was decorated.

Brereton was awarded the silver star along with eight other officers and men for low-altitude bombing raid against Japanese warships at Port Blair, Andaman Islands, in the Indian Ocean last April.

The others cited for this raid were Col. Cecil E. Combs of Dallas, Tex.; Captains Paul J. Long of Patton, Pa., and Delmar J. Rogers of Munger, Mich.; First Lieut. Bruno C. Delmiser of Seattle, Wash.; Second Lieutenants Milton J. Svododa of Portland, Ore.; Nelson P. Davis of Tampa, Fla., and Raymond W. Giannini of Cloverdale, Calif., and Staff Sgt. Ernest E. Lindley of Huntington, Ind.

In addition, the silver star was awarded to Lieut. Col. Birrell Walsh of Jansville, Wis., for directing the dispersion of aircraft of his bombardment group in the Philippines in the face of the first Japanese attack last December.

Tax Bill Authors To Review Work

To 22 Billions Tax Analysts Urge Tripling Of Imposts

New York, Sept. 13.—The National Bureau of Economic Research, a private agency, today recommended the levying of new Federal taxes to raise at least 22 billion dollars—a sum triple present Treasury and congressional proposals—"If inflation is eventually to be avoided."

Declaring the hunt of such a tax program must fall on middle income groups earning between $17,000 and $100,000 a year, the bureau's report said the Government would have to find 75 billion dollars with which to pay war bills before next July. At least 40 billion of this total, the report continued, should be raised by taxes. It fixed 33 billion dollars as the limit that could be safely borrowed without inviting a puny-tuning of present established price ceilings.

The report estimated that new taxes under consideration and regular Federal levies would not bring in more than 25 billion dollars. In an analysis of personal incomes, the report estimated that 100 billion dollars will be paid to consumers in wages, salaries, interest and dividends during the fiscal year, and the same amount by persons with incomes of $1750 a year or less, the report said.

"Accordingly, there is no escaping the fact that it is from the large group earning 75 billion dollars . . . that the major portion of new taxes will have to be raised, if they are raised."

Subcommittee Weighs Petrillo Probe Today

Washington Bureau of Chicago 30c

The record of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, will be scrutinized today by a Congressional subcommittee, which will decide whether to ask Senate authority for a general investigation of Petrillo's action in refusing to permit members of his union to make electrical transcriptions or recordings for radio.

The subcommittee, appointed by Senator Wheeler of Montana, chairman of the Senate interstate commerce committee, is headed by Senator Clark of Idaho, who before Pearl Harbor presided over a similar inquiry into the alleged "war propaganda" of Hollywood movie producers.

Other Senators on the investigating committee are Hill (Ala.), Andrews (Pa.), Democrat, and Currey (S. Dak.), and Tobey (N. H.), Republican. They will consider a resolution by Senator Clark authorizing the investigation, which must be approved by the Senate before Petrillo can be summoned to testify.

The Department of Justice is seeking an injunction against Petrillo and the musicians' federation in the Federal District Court at Chicago but it is understood there will be no objection from Federal prosecutors to the proposed Senate inquiry.

Secret Nazi Radio Believed Hidden In Nicaragua

Managua, Nicaragua, Sept. 13 (AP).—A radio news report from Berlin giving full details within 48 hours of the seizure of a German business house here, has given rise to a belief that a secret Nazi radio station is operating in this Caribbean nation.

Listeners reported that a German short wave station carried the names of officials taking part in the expropriation of the German firm of Bahleke & Co. and that this information could have been sent to Germany only by radio.

If a clandestine radio is operating in Nicaragua it is logical also to suppose that it relays all possible information on Caribbean ship movements.

Bombs Start Fires At Axis Air Base; North Africa Quiet

Cairo, Sept. 13 (AP).—A large force of South African light bombers attacked enemy landing grounds east of Matruh last night, it was announced today.

Bombs fell among enemy aircraft, starting fires. Activity on the Egyptian front yesterday was confined to artillery exchanges in the southern sector after a night of continued Allied patrol activity, British Middle East headquarters announced today.

The war bulletin said five enemy planes were shot down and others damaged over the battle area in Saturday attacks by R. A. F. fighters on scattered formations of German Stukas.

Bombay, Sept. 13 (AP).—One hundred and twenty-nine orphans are on a hunger strike at the Lady Northcote Hindu orphanage, protesting against what the demonstrators charged was maladministration of the institution by the Hindu superintendent.

Survey Today Will Look for Possible Sources of Revenue

By International News Service

Faced by Treasury Department warnings that not enough taxes have been voted, the Senate Finance Committee today will survey its labor to date on the revenue bill and decide whether to add to the load of new levies.

Chairman George (Democrat) of Georgia last night said attempts probably would be made to increase the levies in the bill, but he declined to guess what the result would be.

The bill is still open to amendments and undoubtedly there will be discussion on whether new sources of revenue should be added, George said.

After the committee's decision, legislative drafting clerks will put the amendments into bill form—a job expected to consume several days. This completed, a final vote to report the bill to the Senate will then be taken by the committee.

At its session today the committee was expected to consider whether to insert an over-all catch-all amendment to take in all corporate net profit in excess of 5 per cent of invested capital.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's insistence upon a "forced savings" tax also may be considered. If adopted, this might take the form of a special payroll tax in which employees would receive Government bonds with postwar maturities.

The way is still open for reconsideration of a general retail sales tax.

The Treasury Department estimated that the bill as it now stands will add only $30 million dollars to the $271,000,000 in additional revenue provided by the House bill, after allowing for post-war refunds to corporations and individuals.

As revised by the Senate committee, Treasury experts estimated, the bill will provide 9 billion dollars of revenue in addition to 17 billion dollars called for in existing law—a total of 26 billion dollars.

Out of the new revenue the Treasury would have to refund after the war 800 million dollars to corporations and $1,100,000,000 to individuals—the latter amount under the "victory tax."

Treasury Announces New Tax Anticipation Notes

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announced yesterday two new series of tax savings notes designed to attract purchasers through more liberal terms than the notes introduced to taxpayers last year.

At the same time he announced that sale of the two series, known as A-1944 and B-1944, offered since January 1, had been stopped.

The new notes, like the old ones, are in effect tax anticipation notes. The old ones were usable solely for the payment of taxes, however, while the new series A-1944, like its predecessor, is intended for the small taxpayer and will be offered in amounts ranging from $25 to $5000. The limit which an individual may purchase has been raised from $1200 to $5000. Interest on this series remains at approximately 1.92 per cent a year. The maturity has been extended from two to three years.

The Series C notes, for larger taxpayers, will yield interest equivalent to 1.97 per cent if held to maturity of three years. Interest will accrue monthly and the notes will be redeemable at par and accrued interest on 30-day's notice, if presented not earlier than six months after purchase.

The notes are intended for payment of Federal income, estate and gift taxes. Morgenthau said that they would serve the dual purpose of accumulating tax reserves and short-term investment of cash now lying idle.

Axis Radios Silent, Raids Are Hinted

New York, Sept. 14 (AP).—Radio stations in several Axis countries went off the air tonight, indicating that Allied raids were again in progress in central Europe.

A London report said the Budapest, Bratislava, Bucharest and other stations in Rumania and Slovakia were off the air.

"Russian bombers may be over Hungary again tonight," said a B. C. broadcast from London heard by C. B. S.

Then Duchess came in, took a look and took over. The setter pulled the squirrel's diapers off and cleaned the squirrel with her tongue, as if it were a pup. Mrs. Hobbs' squirrel problem had ended, except, of course, she had to buy a small bottle and nipple to feed Sweetpea milk. And she had to bother with Duchess fussing around, waiting to give the squirrel a bath after every meal.

The squirrel thrives, has opened its eyes, and grows stoutly looks at the trees where less fortunate squirrels live. Which is understandable. But as for Duchess' proud looks, they only can say out there that she never had any puppies of her own, a dear maternal, because she never has been annoyed enough with offspring to become indifferent.

British Meet Little Opposition In Occupation of Madagascar

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 13.—British troops penetrated more deeply into Madagascar today, every dispatch from the French island southeast of Africa indicating that the occupation was being carried out systematically and with little opposition.

The British said they were attempting to inflict as little punishment as possible on French troops standing in the way of marches on the capital, Tananarive, from the north and south.

"We are getting on," said a military commentator. "But it must be remembered that one of our objects in these operations is not to cause French casualties."

The phrase was interpreted to mean that the occupation troops are closer than 71 miles, the distance announced by yesterday's communiqué.

A central column encountered an obstacle at the Betaliboka River on the road to Tananarive, where a section of a suspension bridge had been lowered into the water. French troops there made a gesture of opposition. British reports said 47 French prisoners were taken, some wounded, and that four British were wounded. The river was crossed early yesterday.

Henderson Talk Sets Stage for Driving Curbs

we are likely to lose the war." Cautioning the public against taking stock in reports that synthetic rubber may soon be available, he said:

"Let me tell you that if you have 10,000 miles in your tires that you have no assurance that it will last until you get synthetic tires. You have no assurance because no one can tell with certainty when you will get synthetic tires—and don't believe any statements to the contrary."

He noted that along the East Coast 70 per cent of motorists have "A" books, limiting them to 240 miles a month; 18 per cent have "B" books, allowing them graduated amounts above 240 miles, and a few of "highly essential professions and occupations" have "C" books for necessary driving over 480 miles a month.

Drivers in the unrationed areas, he said, should ask themselves into which of these classifications they fall and limit themselves accordingly.

They thus would become "what we call mileage cutters" and would make "one of the greatest contributions to the war program" that falls upon citizens at the present time, he said.

When in Doubt, Walk

"Walk whenever you can instead of riding," he continued. "When in doubt, walk."

"Above all, cut down your speed along with your mileage. Drive at 35 miles an hour or less . . . your tires will last twice as long at 20 miles an hour as at 40."

Henderson said the Government of those tanks where they are needed, we've got to keep our passenger cars rolling at home—rolling only, however, on missions connected with supplying those tanks, and the guns and the rest of the weapons our soldiers need in ever-increasing volume."

He said most of his suggestions for tire conservation have been made before, but statistics showing one million tire-miles wasted daily indicate that few have taken the recommendations seriously.

"right now" needs 574,000 tons of rubber for tanks, guns, ships and planes and that "our home front army of millions of workers must be kept moving to and from the mines, mills, factories, farms and homes" to get the job done.

"If this web of transportation breaks," he said, "the whole war effort falls apart."

"You can't cut mileage of a tank in combat, but you sure can cut the mileage of most cars on Main street."

Raid Weakens Jap Drive on Port Moresby

By International News Service

General MacArthur's Headquarters in Australia, Sept. 13.—The Japanese drive across the Owen Stanley Mountains toward Port Moresby was regarded tonight as appreciably weakened by a devastating Allied surprise raid that left the enemy's base at Buna in flaming shambles and destroyed 17 Jap planes on the ground.

The 2-hour attack, staged in four waves Saturday, was believed to have virtually eliminated Buna on the northeast coast of New Guinea as a center for the accumulation and movement of Japanese reinforcements and supplies.

Thus, the enemy's spearhead forces, which have thrust across the Owen Stanley Range to the southern slopes in the vicinity of Elogi, 44 airline miles northeast of Port Moresby, appear to have been deprived of the base closest to them on the other side of the mountains.

Nevertheless, it was pointed out that the invaders retain other bases such as Gona, Lae and Salamaua on the northern coast of New Guinea's eastern tongue. In fact, latest reports indicated the Japanese already have reinforced and repositioned their troops in the Elogi sector.

These forces have been held to a standstill for three days, while they were engaged in stiff skirmishing with Australian troops. Both sides, however, have been building up their units for momentarily anticipated renewal of large-scale fighting.

U. S. Shipwrecked Captain Had $500 In Wooden Leg

London, Sept. 13 (AP).—Praising the toughness of the American sailor, the British Press Association quoted a crewman of the British corvette Honeysuckle today for the following story.

Sighting a raft at midnight off Greenland, the corvette picked up the 65-year-old captain of an American merchantman. Holding him aboard a seaman grabbed the captain's leg and found it stiff and hard.

"Bilimey! He's frozen stiff," the rescuer said.

"That's all right, son," replied the captain. "This is the third time I've had to swim for it, but that wooden leg never hurt me yet."

Once on deck the rescued man unweaved the leg to have it dried out, cautioning the seaman to "be careful, there's $500 in it."

Friendly Bears, Fish Bore Builders

Logan, Iowa, Sept. 13 (UP).—P. K. Duvall, road building contractor home for a vacation from Alaska, complained tonight that the men building the military highway through the northern wilderness were becoming bored with friendly bears and spirited fish which grab at a hook baited with nothing more than a white rag.

"The darned bears are more annoying than sidewalk superintendents watching an excavation for a new city hall," Duvall said. "They come up to sniff at the machinery and we have to stop work to shoo them back into the woods."

The 18-year-old queen, entered as "Miss Texas," won the "Miss America" title last night when the judges, some of the top pulchritude experts in the country, selected her over 29 girls in Atlantic City's annual bathing beauty contest.

The Texas beauty, who has dark brown hair and flashing greenish-brown eyes, almost missed winning. Not for lack of beauty or talent—it was a fish.

Thrilled at the opportunity of eating her first fish dinner, she ate rather heartily Wednesday shortly after her arrival in the resort city.

An attack of indigestion followed and for a time, her mother, Mrs. Carroll Denison, thought seriously of withdrawing her only child from the contest. However, Jo-Carroll would have none of it.

She got up and went to the boardwalk theater where the judging was being done and from the start she was a prime favorite with the spectators. Some of her most ardent rooters were soldiers from the Lone Star State, who are stationed here with the U. S. Army air forces.

Bill Drafted to Give President Wide Price-Control Powers

Florida, all members of the House Banking Committee.

"We all agree on the scope of the legislation," Barkley said.

"There may be some language in the Senate bill that differs from what the House bill will contain, but they will be identical in general purpose."

The Kentuckian said nobody has contended that the President should be authorized to reduce wages or to reduce farm prices below their levels of recent date. Barkley intimated the bill would authorize the President to roll back existing farm price ceilings to parity or current levels, whichever is higher.

There is no provision in the bill for "floors" either for farm prices or for wages. Barkley explained that the problem of fixing "floors" for farm prices, with a view to protecting farmers against possible postwar deflation, was a complex problem that would be considered later.

Barkley cautioned against saying there would be "freezing" of wages. "In the absence of any wage parity law such as there is for farm products," he said, "it is not easy to write a wage formula. Our bill will authorize and direct the President to stabilize farm prices and wages simultaneously."

"This problem of stabilizing wages cannot be covered in a single executive order. It is a day-to-day proposition."

Output of Iron Ore Can Be Decisive, Patterson Asserts

Negaunee, Mich., Sept. 13.—Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson said today in an address prepared for delivery before the iron miners' family picnic here today that "the question of how long this war will last is in the hands of the American miner."

Citing Gen. John J. Pershing's words during the dark hours for the Allies in the spring of 1918—"Germany must be beaten, Germany must be beaten, Germany must be beaten"—the Undersecretary said the time of eventual Allied victory in this war depended to a large extent on how the United Nations made use of their capacity to produce steel.

"Altogether, the Axis powers, counting in the occupied controlled countries, have an estimated production capacity of 64 million tons of steel in a year," Patterson said. "The capacity of the United Nations is more than twice that—130 million tons. But capacity to produce and actual production are two different things."

"If that capacity could be speedily translated into tanks, guns, shells, airplanes, it would, of course, appreciably shorten the war. It can, and will, spell the difference between victory and defeat."

The Undersecretary said that shortage of food for miners, Allied bombing raids and "ceaseless sabotage, here a little and there a little," undoubtedly was cutting German steel production in occupied and controlled countries by "thousands of tons."

He said Japan was faced with the difficulty of transporting ore from the Philippines, the Malay Peninsula, Burma and Indo-China.

Stressing the fact that capacity to produce in itself is of little value unless production takes advantage of it, Patterson said "You can't eat capacity. You can't fight a war on it. The stuff is in the ground. It's a matter of getting it out. That's where you men . . . come in. The question of how long this war will last is in the hands of the American miner."

He warned that a Hitler victory would shape "the course of the world until the Judgment Day. There never would be another opportunity for liberty and justice to assert themselves again."

McNutt Urged To Form Nurse Supply Board

New York, Sept. 13.—Stella Gostray, chairman of the National Nursing Council for War Service, said today that the council will recommend that a national nursing supply board be set up under the War Manpower Commission.

She said that the proposal to meet the increasingly critical shortage of nurses overworked out at a series of council committee meetings here, and will be presented in Washington tomorrow.

Miss Gostray said that the formation of a nursing supply board would carry on effectively, in a specific profession, the work begun by the recent appointment of a women's policy committee under the manpower commission.

The problem of keeping up minimum civilian nursing service providing the 3000 nurses a month asked for by the Army and Navy compel the use of every possible resource, she said.

Organizations represented in the nursing council for war service are the American Nurses Association, National Organization for Public Health Nursing, National League of Nursing Education, National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, Association of Collegiate Schools of Nursing, American Red Cross Nursing Service, and the Federal Nursing Service.

Freight Derailed

Buenos Aires, Sept. 13 (P).—Newspaper reports from the town of Pichanal, in the province of Salta, said tonight that a freight train had been derailed between Formosa and Salta on the same track over which a special coach bearing President Ramon S. Castillo had been scheduled to travel early tomorrow.

Months-Old Allocations Plan Not Yet Set Up

attacked Pearl Harbor and our production efforts were raised to heights previously believed impossible. Today, more than nine months after Pearl Harbor, the War Production Board is still striving to secure a "clear, over all picture of the Nation's total requirements for raw materials." An "all-out" system of allocations is still far from a reality.

Meanwhile, WPB is attempting to get out of the Production Requirements Plan (PRP) enough information on our total materials requirements to make priorities workable. In their efforts to save priorities, certain WPB officials are expected to offer considerable resistance to any system of all-out allocations, including the plan recently sent to WPB by the armed services. Allocations, many WPB officials fear, will be too difficult to place into effect.

PRP requires all contractors using more than $5000 worth of critical materials to file applications for the materials they need, giving data on the quantities that will be required during the next quarter of the year along with an estimate of total production in dollars.

Under the PRP plan, the totals are examined by the WPB Requirements Committee which cuts up the materials pie and endeavors to fit demand to supply. Then, the PRP applications are formally "processed" with each contractor and subcontractor being given an allotment of material which he can try to purchase with his priority rating.

PRP is Superimposed
As now operated, PRP is superimposed on all the existing systems of materials control, including the priority rating system, a series of limitation orders on the manufacture of certain products, restrictions on the use to which certain materials can be put, and in the cases of a few critically scarce items, a modified plan of allocations.

At the same time, WPB recently started an experiment to control the amount of materials needed to all three contracts for radios by preparing a budget of materials for each contract when it was signed and then granting the contractors priority ratings adequate to secure the materials.

Like PRP, this plan uses priority ratings as its base.

Informed Government officials point to the following defects in the Production Requirements Plan as now operated:

1. The amount of clerical work surpasses the imagination. For the third quarter, the forms were not processed in time to be of any use. Officials are hopeful that the work in the fourth quarter will be finished on time, although they acknowledge that doing the job on time will require "shotgun methods."
2. The administration of PRP is unduly centralized in WPB and in Washington.
3. PRP does not provide for scheduling of production. PRP certificates are in no sense a guarantee of the materials necessary to do any certain job, and because of the defects of the priorities system, is even less of a guarantee that the materials that are finally purchased will be delivered on schedule.

Schedules Complicated
Schedules are further complicated by the fact that the vast clerical job makes it difficult to integrate properly all the phases of any single production program. Unless all of the sub-contractors of any one prime contractor receive proportionately the same treatment as far as materials are concerned, the prime contractor's schedules will get out of gear. This is further complicated by the fact that correct ratios of, say, copper to steel, etc., must be maintained at all times for all sub-contractors and for the prime contractor to make proper scheduling possible.

To make PRP more useful, WPB is now considering requiring contractors to file their information on an individual product basis so that PRP can use the information to set up tentative production schedules. Up to now, PRP has only told WPB how much copper, steel, etc., a given concern needed to fill all its war contracts. These contracts might involve a large number of items including tanks, guns, etc., but because the needed detailed information has been received in bulk form by companies, PRP has failed to provide data needed to reveal a contractor's item by item production schedule.

This scheduling problem becomes

Scrap Collection Rises
But Not Fast Enough
Scrap collections show an increase in some areas under the stress of campaigns by the Government and other agencies and suffice to maintain steel production at near-capacity levels, according to the magazine Steel's weekly survey.

Open hearth furnaces are being kept up in many cases, however, on day-to-day receipts, the survey says, adding that despite all efforts to reclaim for scrap all iron and steel material in structures and machinery not in essential use, it has not been possible to build up reserves and "treasurehouses" of scrap that the winter will bring a famine.

Collections, it is pointed out, are dipping more deeply into sources. Many guns, cannonballs and other war relics at army posts and in public parks are being melted into steel for armament for the present war.

One drawback on collections is cited as the loss of many "peddlers" who have found little profit and have turned to war work which pays more.

Soldier Admits Slaying Two Wis. Women

By the Associated Press
Santa Maria, Calif., Sept. 13.—A 21-year-old Army deserter, Robert T. Bailey, signed a confession today, Deputy District Attorney Thomas Weldon said, admitting he killed two Kenosha, Wis., social workers last Monday near Tomah, Wis.

Weldon said Bailey ascribed theft of their car and money as his motive, but he steadfastly denied that he had raped the victims.

The nude bodies of the women, Miss Neil John Pietrangeli, 30, and Miss Dorothy Baun, 32, were found Tuesday by the side of a road.

Bailey also had boasted he killed the soldier hitch-hiker and threw the body into the St. Croix River, but pressed for a reason for this playing, he eventually admitted it was untrue and that no one else was involved in the case.

Offered Him a Ride
"Bailey has told several conflicting stories of the actual killing," said Weldon, "but I believe the confession he has just signed is true insofar as his admission that he alone shot the women is concerned. At first he claimed a soldier hitch-hiker he met in Cincinnati raped the women. Now he confesses he didn't meet the soldier until after he had killed them."

Weldon said Bailey's confession related, in effect, that he met Miss Pietrangeli and Miss Baun at a street intersection in Madison, Wis., as the former's automobile stopped for a traffic signal. They offered him a ride and the three drove for about 30 minutes when he decided to take their purses and the auto.

He ordered them from Highway 11 onto a side road and, after forcing them from the machine, instructed them to disrobe and go toward a nearby hill.

Miss Pietrangeli, the story related, told him she intended to call the police. This angered him and he fired an Army .45-caliber revolver at her. He said the bullet struck Miss Baun first and that he believed it also penetrated the other woman's body, because they both fell to the ground. He said he then fired three more bullets into their bodies and that when he left them Miss Pietrangeli was dead but Miss Baun was moaning.

Bailey related that he drove to Tomah, where he offered a ride to a soldier, taking him as far as Eau Claire, where they arrived at 3 a. m. Tuesday. Going to Le Sueur, Minn., he cashed a check on Miss Pietrangeli's account there, claiming he was her sweetheart and that she had authorized his use of the account.

Picks Up Two Girls
Driving to Sioux City, Iowa, Bailey met two 16-year-old girls, Alberta Coon and Pauline Conley. He offered to take them to California, and they accepted. At Denver, Colo., he was stopped by a traffic officer while traveling 75 miles an hour, but Bailey said, "All he did was to warn me I'd have to slow down."

Weldon said Bailey told him he wanted to come to California and go to Fort Ord to kill his brother, W. R. Bailey, who he said was stationed at that Army camp. He held a grudge against his brother, Weldon said, because he had turned him in to a parole officer in Mississippi five years ago.

Bailey, the deputy district attorney said, deserted from the Army in July, 1941. He was arrested and sent to Leavenworth Penitentiary. Later he was released to reenter the Army and reportedly deserted again from Fort Bragg, N. C.

Clothing belonging to the two slain women was found in Bailey's car here.

The two girls with whom Bailey came West are at the home of an aunt of Miss Coon, Mrs. Cyril Simmeon, with whom they were visiting when Bailey was arrested.

Simmeon, a former police officer, observed Bailey painting out the white tire sidewalls on the car he was driving. When Simmeon questioned him he received only evasive answers, Simmeon then called police.

Weldon, describing Bailey as an amiable fellow who is "quite a braggart" and tells a good story, said the youth declared he was not sorry for what he had done.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation holds warrants for Bailey's arrest charging him with theft of Army property and desertion.

Montgomery First-Aid Chief Hailed

Shortly after Pearl Harbor a young matron walked into Montgomery County (Md.) Red Cross Chapter headquarters and asked if there was anything she could do.

A harassed staff pointed to the first aid desk, piled high with requests for instructors and classes, and suggested:

"See if you can get any order out of that."

The young woman took one look at the job before her and then figuratively rolled up her sleeves and dug in.

Since that time, one of the most efficiently handled departments of the county chapter has been the first aid desk. Despite her duties as wife and mother of two sons, Mrs. Joseph P. Bachman, 5314 Lambeth Road, Bethesda, Md., had found her niche.

The busy little lady at the first aid desk in chapter headquarters in the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Recreational Center still has plenty to do—but "it's really fun and I enjoy it."

Dempsey Wins New Mexico Primary; Hatch Victor; Maine Voters Balloting Today

By the Associated Press
Albuquerque, N. Mex., Sept. 13.—John J. Dempsey, who resigned as undersecretary of interior to seek the governorship, rolled up a heavy majority in New Mexico's Democratic primary and tonight received the congratulations of his opponent, Bryan G. Johnson of Albuquerque.

Returns from 693 of the 915 precincts gave Dempsey 32,776 and Johnson 22,136.

Democrats gave a landslide endorsement of Senator Carl A. Hatch, New Mexico's junior Senator, and Representative Clinton P. Anderson, in their successful quest for re-nomination. Hatch trailed in only 3 of the 31 counties with more than half the State's 915 voting districts accounted for in yesterday's election.

A bitter-end race for the second congressional seat in the House—congressional in the House—continued in the last census reapportionment—was developing between two of the four candidates.

Returns from 626 precincts gave Corporation Commissioner Robert Valdez 14,116 votes and Public Service Commissioner A. M. Fernandez 14,331. W. W. Nichols of Clovis had 11,601 and State Representative Coe Howard 8,185.

The Republican candidates for Congress and State officers were unopposed.

Maine Voting Today
For State, U. S. Offices
Special Dispatch to The Post
Portland, Me., Sept. 13.—Maine has its general election tomorrow. The choice of a Governor, United States Senator, three members of the House of Representatives and State officers will give the Nation the first decision between Republicans and Democrats on a State-wide basis since the start of the war.

Republican leaders, mindful of the old adage, "As Maine goes, so goes the Nation," expressed confidence of victory tonight, but they had their fingers crossed hopefully in the close battle in the First Congressional District between Robert Hale, Republican, and Louis J. Brann, former Democratic Governor.

Hale attracted national attention by winning the Republican nomination over the incumbent, Representative James C. Oliver, last June largely through his advocacy of the foreign policies of President Roosevelt.

Now Brann, an in-and-out with the New Deal, is centering his campaign on a 1936 magazine article written by Hale entitled, "But I, Too, Hate Roosevelt." It dealt entirely with the domestic New Deal program. This seems to be the only fight of the election.

In the Second District, United States Representative Margaret Chase Smith (Republican) of Skowhegan is opposed for reelection by Attorney Bradford C. Redonnet (Democrat) of Wiscasset, never a previous officeholder.

In the Third District, Representative Frank Fellows (Republican) of Bangor, is unopposed.

United States Senator Wallace H. White (Republican), seeks reelection over Fulton J. Redman (Democrat) of Portland, a former political columnist who was defeated for the gubernatorial post two years ago.

Republican Gov. Sumner Sewall is opposed for reelection by George W. Lane, Jr., Lewiston banker and industrialist and a new leader in State Democratic circles.

Policemen Must Stay

An Army-Navy statement of last week should further clarify the status of District police and firemen who would like to join the services. Men in key positions in Federal agencies or in war industry, the statement said, will not be accepted for commission or enlistment without a release from the agency or industry concerned. Obviously the intent is to prevent the disruption of essential civilian work in this period of acute shortages of manpower.

Further emphasis on this policy seems desirable because the status of police and firemen and the principle behind the Selective Service Act have been so frequently misunderstood. In our letter columns today, for example, a correspondent using the name of Russel J. Ross takes us to task for defending the deferment of police and firemen to avoid a breakdown in the protective services they render in the Nation's Capital. He is even more critical of the District Commissioners for halting the exodus of men from the Police and Fire Departments. But he ignores the spirit and letter of the Selective Service Act.

Instead of trying to thwart the plans of the armed services for expansion of their personnel, the city fathers granted military leave to many police and firemen a few months ago. It was only when the two local departments were confronted by what threatened to be a mass movement of their personnel to the Coast Guard that the Commissioners intervened. And then they did not act arbitrarily. They took up their problem with the Navy, the Coast Guard and the Selective Service authorities. There was unanimous agreement that the efficiency of the Police and Fire Departments must be maintained. To make that policy effective the Navy and Coast Guard agreed not to accept District policemen or firemen, without the consent of the city fathers.

That procedure was thoroughly in keeping with the Selective Service Act. Congress specifically gave the President power to defer the drafting of any person holding a Federal, State, or District of Columbia office "whose continued service in such office is found . . . to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest." The real difficulty, we repeat, is that the Maryland and Virginia Selective Service Boards have not yet recognized the obvious necessity of maintaining effective police and fire protection in the wartime Capital.

"Prejudice Firing"

War agencies clearly have no business subjecting Federal employees to the kind of pressure detailed by Jerry Klutz in yesterday's Federal Diary. Many of the agencies, it appears, are keeping employees in their jobs by the simple device of threatening to fire them "with prejudice" if they try to get better jobs or to leave Washington. For those who plan to continue in Government service it is an effective device, because the implication is that once the prejudice charge is noted on their records they will be automatically barred from Federal jobs elsewhere. Mr. Klutz points out that this implication is unfounded and that if the prejudice charge is unwarranted it can be wiped out. But the fact remains that many Government workers have not known this and have been the victims of a subterfuge calculated to thwart their ambitions and personal preferences. Thanks to Mr. Klutz, the prejudice charge will be less effective hereafter. It is most unfortunate, however, that the agencies ever resorted to such a device, for among other things it demonstrates a deplorable lack of understanding of what constitutes intelligent personnel relations.

From now on, nevertheless, there is not much doubt that, for a variety of reasons, Government agencies here will be increasingly hard put to hold on to personnel. Draft requirements, higher pay elsewhere, and reluctance to put up with living conditions in the Capital are some of the factors that are bound to have an even greater adverse effect on the agencies than heretofore. Yet it is essential for the war agencies, particularly, to function with maximum efficiency. Whether this can be done without an official order "freeing" urgently needed persons in the jobs they now hold is questionable. Such an order would hardly be popular, since its over-all effect would be no different than that achieved with the use of the prejudice threat. But a legitimate freezing order, if necessary to the prosecution of the war, would at least put an end to individual abuses of authority which Government workers have had good reason to resent.

Battle Of Priorities

It is no credit to American statesmanship that in our tenth month at war we still lack a simple and effective means of directing the flow of scarce materials into our munitions plants and essential civilian industries. Yet that is precisely the situation by which we are confronted. The story has not been officially told to the public. But it is well known to those who are keeping a close watch on our war-production efforts. And articles such as the current series in The Post by Ben Gilbert are now bringing the public details of the lost battle of priorities.

The priorities system was supposed to keep scarce materials flowing into war plants, where they would be of most use in equipping our own soldiers and our Allies. Under it the right to buy strategic materials has been reserved to manufacturers turning out airplanes, tanks, guns and so forth. Long ago it was discovered, however, that the right to buy scarce materials will not keep a plant from closing down if other plants have monopolized the supply. In other words, priorities have given no guarantee that available materials will be distributed among war plants in accord with our most urgent military requirements.

Some plants, as we have previously pointed out, are hoarding steel, while others have to slow down operations for want of steel. That is an inevitable result of the scramble for scarce materials which has been permitted under the priorities system. At best priorities are only a crude means of preventing the use of scarce materials for non-war purposes. They do not assure effective use of those materials within the war industries themselves. So they give no assurance of attaining a well balanced war-production program, which is now the chief objective of the WPB. Even the use of emergency directives to channel scarce material into certain factories where the needs have been most imperative have not overcome the weaknesses of such haphazard controls.

Our soldiers fighting on various fronts without sufficient airplane and tank support will not be impressed by the fact that strategic materials are sailed away in many of our factories for future use. We owe it to them to see that every pound of steel, aluminum and so forth is allocated to plants which can make the most immediate use of it in strengthening our arsenal. In short, we ought to mobilize all our resources to the utmost concern for battles soon to be fought and not merely referee a struggle for priorities.

The shortcomings of the present system doubtless explain in some measure why WPB Chief Nelson let active control over priorities slip through his fingers to the Army-Navy Munitions Board. But it does not explain why the WPB has delayed so long in putting an allocations system into effect. The total war in which we are engaged on every continent demands not only conservation of our strategic materials for war purposes but also careful timing of their use. Nothing short of complete control over the scarce materials from which the tools of war are fashioned will make that timing possible and thus bring our maximum productive strength into play.

Essential civilian requirements must, of course, be considered along with the demands of the armed services. Construction of synthetic rubber plants and war housing, for example, is necessary to insure a steady output of tanks and ships. But this fact only makes it the more imperative to end the hoarding of scarce materials that could be put to advantageous use now. What we need is a comprehensive outline of all military and essential civilian requirements, based upon the most up-to-date war plans of the United Nations, plus definite and positive allocation of scarce materials to those specific projects.

Drafting Youths

It is difficult to see what useful purpose was served by the President's comments on the drafting of youths 18 and 19 years old. The Army has stated repeatedly that it wants young men in this age group to be made legally available for military service. The President now says, however, that since the Army is taking in about as many older men as it can handle it will not be necessary to draft youths before next year. This statement, together with the President's admission that he has not even decided about the advisability of securing enabling legislation beforehand, will doubtless be welcomed by a Congress that has been frankly reluctant to act in the matter. The obvious implication now is that there is no very great rush necessary in changing the draft law.

To our way of thinking this is most unfortunate, for it inevitably means further delay in coming to grips with the increasingly difficult problem of manpower. The War Department has made it perfectly clear that it contemplates the eventual creation of a mass Army that, conservatively estimated, may number eight to nine million men. This would be roughly twice as many men as are now in the Army. It goes without saying that to create such an Army, to supply it, and to continue as the arsenal of the United Nations, will impose a greater production burden on the home front than is generally recognized. Above all, it will require the husbanding of production skill and experience.

It may be that, in spite of optimistic estimates, there are not more than a million youths 18 and 19 years old who would be available for the Army, assuming their eligibility under the draft law. For the most part, however, they are youths who are either fresh out of school or who have not been working long enough to acquire the know-how that makes older men generally more valuable in the majority of war-production jobs. That younger men make better fighters is, moreover, an established fact. And it will not be possible to win this war without making the most effective use of all manpower—young men as well as older men, married as well as single.

Before Congress breathes too loud a sigh of relief over the President's comments on drafting youths, therefore, it should be made to realize that the longer the delay in passing enabling legislation, the more difficult it may be later on to make satisfactory personnel adjustments on the home front. Without such adjustments it will be literally impossible to service the great Army we are in the process of building.

Not A Failure

Secretary Morgenthau is greatly perturbed by rumors that he considers the voluntary war-bond-sales program a failure. Mr. Morgenthau has merely admitted that a voluntary savings plan is incapable of closing the tremendous inflationary gap between the amount of money available for spending and the supply of goods available for purchase at current price levels. Voluntary purchases of war bonds have been large, judged by ordinary standards, even though they have fallen short of the billion-dollar monthly sales goal at which the Treasury aimed. For that matter, even if Mr. Morgenthau's optimistic expectations had been realized, sales of war-savings bonds would have been woefully inadequate by comparison with Treasury needs.

It does not follow, merely because the voluntary savings plan has proved inadequate, that it is a failure or that it should be abandoned. On the contrary, it has brought much needed billions into the Treasury and has laid the foundation for systematic saving by hundreds of thousands of Americans. Everything that has been done is in the nature of useful preparation for the inauguration of a more extensive savings plan based on some form of compulsion. It is a matter of detail whether such savings should be devoted to outright purchases of specified amounts of bonds, with amounts varying in accordance with the buyer's income, or take the form of post-war refunds of a percentage of so-called taxes paid to the Government. In either case, saving would in reality no longer be a matter of volition.

There should be no relaxation of efforts to increase the volume of voluntary contributions merely because some form of compulsory savings impends. For every dollar voluntarily saved to buy bonds is a dollar deducted from surplus funds that threaten to produce inflation. Dollars spent for bonds, furthermore, reduce the volume of Government promises to pay that otherwise would find lodgment in commercial bonds and swell bank demand deposits in an inflationary fashion. Consequently, volunteer bond buyers have the satisfaction of knowing that whatever they do now to help finance the war is a valuable and timely aid in the fight against inflation. Some individuals, of course, will have to cut down their voluntary purchases of war bonds when contributions become compulsory. But that is no valid reason for anticipating these forced impositions by refusing to buy now. No doubt many persons with surplus income will find satisfaction later on in supplementing forced savings by continuing to make voluntary contributions of savings to the war chest. The two systems are not mutually exclusive—they are in fact complementary.

HOUSE ALONE

We are lost where we hide.
Turn the lamp low,
The fire let die.
Throw the door wide.
There is this to be tried.

The shelter we choose
Is less than a light
At the border of night.
The strength not to use
Is little to lose.

Whatever we face,
Let it look from the lawn,
Let it crouch and come on,
It will find us in place,
Not cornered in space.

Letters To The Editor

Police In The Draft

I would like to call your attention to the editorial which appeared in The Post of September 5, entitled, "Police In The Draft."

The intention of Congress was to allow all persons, with no exceptions stated, if they are qualified, to volunteer their services to the Armed Forces of the United States. That is the law and applies to the District of Columbia as well as to the several States. If Congress had meant to allow exceptions to the above law, Congress would have so stated in the absence of any exceptions, then it must be taken that this law applies equally to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, members of the Police Department, members of the Fire Department and the members of the Navy, as well as any private employer, wherever he may be. In order to have any Federal law function properly, it must apply to everyone equally and without discrimination of any class of persons.

Now, having ascertained that this section of the United States Code is constitutional, we should see just how it applies to the employer, meaning now the District of Columbia Commissioners, and the employees, meaning now the members of the Police and Fire Departments of the District. It does not allow the Commissioners arbitrarily to say that the Federal law applies to all employees of the District, excepting to the members of the Police and Fire Departments. In doing so, the Commissioners have attempted to place themselves on a plane higher than the Congress of the United States, and have substituted for the laws of the United States, a dictatorial policy which flagrantly violates all of the constitutional rights of the members of the Police and Fire Departments.

Allow me to quote from an order of the Commissioners dated June 29, wherein this unwarranted and flagrant violation of constitutional rights has occurred. The amendment is as follows: "That all other employees, except members of the Police Department, D. C., and members of the Fire Department, D. C., who may be called to active service or otherwise enter active military service in the armed forces of the United States, shall upon application be granted leave of absence without pay until 48 days after the termination of their military service or after the date upon which they are first entitled to obtain discharge or other release from active military service, whichever date be earlier."

Now, the exception which discriminates against the Police and Fire Departments of the District of Columbia, is an overt act which is in direct contradiction to the intention of Congress as is stated in the United States Code. It is so much of a contradiction that it seems to border on being a seditious act to the detriment of the armed forces of the United States.

Uniformity

One uniform application blank should be made compulsory for use by all Government agencies. If this simple measure were to be adopted, a great deal of the taxpayers' money would be saved, and would-be job-seekers would also be spared many headaches. The only possible defense for the present constellation of personnel blanks is that they are of inestimable value in perpetuating that venerable and hoary institution known as the "pull-in-post" run-around. And that institution is one thing we ought to do away with.

Art Or Scrap?

In reference to the idea of Claire A. Haupt that New Orleans should contribute her iron grilles, etc., to the scrap pile.

The balconies, gates and fences in New Orleans and Charleston are highly valued not only by architects and artists, but by all the citizens of this country who realize the beauty of these two old cities.

The Latin Americans visiting this country will see in these cities something more appealing to them than New York's skyscrapers. I don't think these things are on the same plane as statues of politicians.

Government Workers

A few days ago a conversation was repeated to me of what a certain person had said to a Government worker. The part that drew my attention was: "You damn Government workers are just the scum of the earth coming up here to see what you can get for nothing."

The Government workers, I know for a fact, are not the scum of the earth. They happen to be quite intelligent. For everyone's information, a Government worker must take a pretty tough examination to be working for the Government and pass it with a high grade.

Probably a lot of people think that we are overpaid for the work we do. This is not so. Everyone working for the Government is paid a fair wage and deserves every penny he makes. Many are working overtime and are not getting paid for it.

And had you ever thought why most of them are here? In case you have forgotten there is a war going on and these many people are certainly doing their part to help their country.

This also happens to be the Capital of the United States. As far as our coming here is concerned, we have as much right here as you who have lived here all your life. This belongs to everyone who lives in this great country of ours.

May I conclude with one last cutting remark. Those who are complaining of crowded conditions here are certainly prospering under it. High rentals and high prices for everything have given the opportunity to sit back and take in the money.

Iron For Curbing

This cry for scrap metal is inconsistent with the fact that channel iron estimated at 20 pounds per foot is now, today, being laid as curbing in down town New York that would average 10 tons to the city block.

I have seen the same thing in Washington, in my own city of Boston. This use of metal does not encourage the collection of scrap iron and steel when city fathers make such use of materials that might be used for defense.

This has been called to the attention of Donald Nelson by others than myself—what is being done about it?

Communicues

I suggest an editorial telling the public that if it will read the Army and Navy communiques on the war it will get all there is to be known on the subject.

Wednesday afternoon's late editions carried Navy Communiqué No. 112, the fourth paragraph of which included the following:

"In addition to the cruiser which was previously reported burning fiercely, one destroyer and four additional ships were left burning and the transport which was reported to have been hit during this attack was later seen abandoned, as the enemy force withdrew."

I heard four or five radio news commentators Wednesday evening and none of these mentioned the last four words quoted above, which were the big news of the day. Nor did the papers which first published the communiqué headline the fact that the battle was over and the Japs running away. The Post, Thursday morning, with no further information than was published Wednesday evening, headlined the war news:

"Jap Fleet Runs as Six More Ships Are Hit." Friday's Post carries Navy Communiqué No. 113, which says:

"South Pacific: 1.—"Since the issuance of Navy Department Communiqué No. 112 there has been no further action in the sea battle off the Solomon Islands."

Radio commentators with news desk experience usually give the day's important news, and news editors frequently make a whole page over to get the big fact to the reader, but occasionally there is a slip, as in this case. The discriminating reader should read the official communiques, carefully, for the known facts, and then, with the facts in mind, as much of the speculation and comment thereon as his time may permit.

Young America Speaks

We march with faith in our hearts, courage in our souls and a true understanding of what we are fighting for.

Enemies of America listen and take heed: As we love those who gave us life to do we love America. This land with its blue skies, mountains and plains, lakes, streams, valleys and rivers, all its magnificent resources, the main streets from New York to Frisco, the movies, baseball parks, dance halls and football fields, the chop suey, spaghetti and hotdog stands, Coney Island and Hollywood. We love our ranches in the West and our plantations in the South, the jazz from Harlem and the yodel of the West, the double-decked buses and ice cream cones, the rumble and roar of subways and snowstorms, the peace and quiet of our little farms.

This belongs to us, it is ours and it shall be defended with fierce determination, free blood and the help of God in whom we have placed our trust.

Letters To Soldiers

If you are a sweetheart or wife and correspond with a soldier friend or husband, perhaps this incident I read recently may be helpful. In World War I it is told that an officer assigned to censorship duty ran across this message from a soldier to his wife: "Please don't send me any more sagging letters. I can't stand it. You are three thousand miles away, and it doesn't do me good. Do let me enjoy the war in peace."

The Post Impressionist

Broadcast

The small studio at the Columbia Broadcasting Station felt very cool the other afternoon after coming in from hot outside Washington. I was sitting across from Bob Ehrman, a C. B. S. announcer, while he checked over a script and wrote an introduction for Miss Ruth Chatterton, who was to broadcast in a few minutes on behalf of the Stage Door Canteen of Washington. He had not scratched—it didn't dare go to such lengths in the silence of this chamber. I looked around. The grand piano in the corner stood on casters like a huge bird poised for anticipatory flight. An air-conditioner went through a series of sibilant revolutions, fell into a coma and then began all over again. The carpet was lush under my shoes. Even the glass through which I could see the audience went up an unmistakable wall of silence. I had never in all my life before been brought to such utter speechlessness by carpet, wall, glass, piano, door, window and that little instrument, two-faced thing that it was, dangling before me in the center of the chrome table. What abundant exuberance I had felt in the imminent presence of Ruth Chatterton seen on the stage the night before in "Private Lives," seen and extolled to the skies by my fate her ancestry, her musical lyrical voice, its whisper piercing ears in the gallery, whose charm as a woman and an actress was so tangible over the footlights that by lifting your eyes you were spared into that which women have spun since the time of Troy. Let me go back—what exuberance I meant to feel at her entrance was dispelled by the chastity of the studio room itself.

Ruth Chatterton came in with Henry. Henry is her French poodle, an aristocratic black woolly dog, that sits on his haunches with great dignity. A dog you take no liberties with and one that somehow takes your attention from Miss Chatterton. Henry in the studio was more silent than the piano, the walls, the glass window partition. Henry was Silence.

Joe King entered with Miss Chatterton and took his place across from her. I moved to one side. Miss Chatterton, wearing red turtleneck rimmed glasses, began reading the script. On one wrist jingled a charm bracelet, but under control. It dared not jangle—it tinkled through some secret control of the actress, was completely subdued throughout the broadcast. Miss Chatterton's plastic purse lay on the table beside her. One hellish black pupil lifted now and then in soft accents around the leg of the chair. She read silently in preparation, cleared her throat, read on.

"Hello, Fred," Joe teased the dog. "He looks more like Queen Mary with that headress," I said. Bob Ehrman still scratching—ash, softly writing—on the piano, laughed. "That's remarkably true," he said, glancing at the dog.

Miss Chatterton continued to read her script. A pause filled with many pauses stretched from the last spoken word to the approaching one. "Is his name Fred?" Joe King asked. "Certainly not," answered the very laconic Miss Chatterton. Another pause filled the little studio, longer than other pauses and even more silent. But this announcer couldn't give in. In another moment, another nomenclature, was evidently the minute to follow through, Chatterton, silence, and all.

"Well, what is his name?" he finally blurted out. "Henry," said Miss Chatterton, still reading her script. "Joe was not yet done. 'Will he disturb the broadcast in any way?' he pursued.

"Certainly not," answered Miss Chatterton. Ehrman engulfed even Joe. Ehrman had his introduction ready. Joe looked at the clock. Miss Chatterton glanced at the clock. She put a lozenge between her lips and cleared her throat.

Three minutes. Two minutes. One minute. Thirty seconds. I could hardly breathe for suspense. The engineer behind the glass window appeared more impersonal than the glass. Now the clock and time took up the center of the drama—in another moment, another half moment, another half breath—

Time and the world; the split moment for dropping a bomb; the point of the dial at which an offensive in Russia and in Egypt begins; let withheld its jingling. From her lips issued such lyrical hypnotizing notes that in my mind the Stage Door Canteen soon opened its doors in the old historical Belasco Theater on Lafayette Square was already embraced in the hearts of Washington. As Miss Chatterton put into words of simplicity and charm the story of the American Theater Wing and its great work in organizing Stage Door Canteens across the country, I looked about me again, and as I looked it stared me in the face—here was the essence of silence—here was the essence of the platonism—and here in this microphone, in this table, in these two people—an announcer—an actress—nomenclature in this moment—nomenclature for new they were two disembodied voices—here was that other world—chaste, ice blue, impersonal.

Suddenly the voices ceased. Joe King laughed. "Well, Fred, you were a good dog," he said to Queen Mary.

"His name is Henry," corrected Miss Chatterton, shaking hands with Joe and leaving the studio.

Britain And India

By Ernest K. Lindley

Harvest Of Bitterness

FEAR OF embarrassing an ally, and especially of playing into the hands of enemy propagandists, may be carried to the point of suppressing views which, in the common interest, deserves to be published.

It should be said that the reports to the House of Commons on the Indian situation by Prime Minister Churchill and L. S. Amery, Secretary of State for India, did not make a favorable impression in official circles here. The statements confirmed the impression that the British government's Indian policy at the present time is solely repression. This policy may succeed after a fashion, although the Congress Party leaders boast that it will not, and reliable information received here contradicts the statements to the Commons that the situation is currently improving. But an outright policy of repression is bound to yield, eventually, a harvest of bitterness, even greater than that which already is visible.

American policy toward India at the present time should not be colored by opinions as to British policy in the past or by ideological views concerning the future of India. It must be based on our immediate primary interest in winning the war. The American government, like the other United Nations, is committed to self-government for all peoples as rapidly as they are able to exercise the right. There are no exceptions to this policy on account of color or previous or current imperial connections; although, as Secretary Hull's proviso implies, the willingness to fight on behalf of freedom now against the Axis must be taken as one measure of ability to appreciate the value of freedom and so to be ready for it.

IN DETERMINING whether a particular colonial people should have freedom now or at some later date, many factors must be considered. But the foremost must be: what will help most to win the war? The treatment of the Indian question should be tested by such a formula. The Indian situation is not a purely British problem, no matter how much the statement of this obvious fact may irritate the surviving British Imperialists of the old school. The security of India is fully as important to the United States, China and other United Nations as to Great Britain. This is signified in a concrete way by the fact that American cargo planes carry supplies from China to the American air force in India, and the Chinese army, that lend-lease supplies have been piled up in India; and that American technicians have gone, and are going again, to India to aid in war production.

Bill to 'Freeze' Workers in Vital War Jobs Discussed at Capitol

By the Associated Press

Legislation to "freeze" workers in vital war industries to their present jobs was discussed at the Capitol yesterday as Congressmen returned from the hearings and fishing holes, ending several weeks of informal recess.

The Congressmen were reconvened primarily to act on the anti-inflation measure which President Roosevelt has demanded by October 1. But other business, including the bills to draft 18 and 19-year-olds which are pending in both chambers, also will claim their attention.

Some influential lawmakers who declined to be quoted by name said that a complete inventory of the Nation's labor resources and steps to insure its most efficient use might precede any action to lower the draft age from its present 20-year minimum.

The results of the War Manpower Commission's order forbidding loggers and non-crofters miners in 12 Western States to seek other employment without specific Government approval were watched in this connection. Chairman Paul V. McNutt expressed confidence that employers and workers would comply with the order voluntarily, but hinted that legislation could be sought to implement the commission's powers if necessary.

Reflecting congressional concern over how efficiently those in charge

Nelson Chills Optimistic

'Not Winning Yet'

By the United Press

Camden, N. J., Sept. 13.—Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, warned tonight that we are not winning the war and that although the nation's production record is not nearly good enough, shifts must be made in material allotment that will force layoffs and production changes.

Nelson spoke over a nation-wide radio hookup and his remarks were addressed especially to 3,500,000 workers enrolled in factory-management committees in 1,500 plants. He spoke personally to a rally here of the RCA-Victor labor-management war production drive committee.

He said that further cuts in materials for civilian use and shifts in materials from one war product to another will be made to balance the nation's war production, but said such cuts and assignments would mean enforced layoffs for men and women intent on production for victory.

"You won't like it," he said. "I will not like it, either, but we'll do it when it is made necessary by the fortunes of war."

STRESSING the view that the production record is not good enough Nelson said: "We have not won the war. We are not even winning it yet."

Illustrating the necessity of producing tools of war on a big scale, he said that a single division of present day tanks supported by dive-bombers would have rolled up the Hindenburg line in 1917 in a week.

There is considerable confusion concerning material shortages, he said, and while there are shortages now and will be more in the future, the problems are being attacked by increasing production, reducing civilian consumption and better scheduling.

He told of numerous ways in which workers, inspired by the labor-management committees, had paved the way to huge material savings.

"One man," he said, "figured out how to cut five pieces out of an aluminum sheet that previously had yielded only four. The result—an increase of 20 percent in the material available for the job. Another made a suggestion which cut in half the number of rejection in his department. The result is more than a saving in materials because man-hours are saved as well."

"Someone else redesigned a gadget and saved an ounce of brass. An ounce saved on each of a million gadgets is 3,000 tons of brass. One of the men on the platform here in Camden tonight, Benjamin Willett, a 23-year-old instructor in the crystal laboratory, designed a new jig using a diamond-charged saw for splitting quartz crystals and reduced breakage by 75 per cent. That was a remarkable saving of quartz crystals."

Nelson said that now on it is going to be harder to increase production.

"There are more physical difficulties to be overcome," he said. "Times are tougher. So we will all of us. We will not be stopped."

Nelson said the efforts of the labor-management committees to avert production losses due to labor troubles had been largely successful.

"YOU HAVE read of exceptions where Americans fought each other instead of the Axis. You know the rising temper of the country toward such performances, but we must not confuse the exceptions with the general rule," he said. "I am glad to report that interferences with production because of disputes between labor and management have been exceedingly rare in this production drive."

He said that workers still in peacetime industries sometimes are needlessly concerned by wanting to get into war work and added: "I share with a patriotic worker in a Midwestern electrical plant the pleasure that he reported when the Army showed him that the selfsame switch he made in 1941 on a board of lamps, in 1942, a switch for a bomber."

NELSON URGED all labor-management committees to strive harder to end absenteeism, which he called "Monday morning sickness" or "pay day richness."

"Its true cause is thoughtlessness," he said. "In just one plant of one copper company, absenteeism meant the loss of 16 per cent of annual production. I know this because a Butte, Mont., labor-management committee checked it and reported to me that they were going to stop it."

"Our production drive committee rewards perfect attendance with lapel buttons. One Detroit committee undertook to pay for a day's absence without cause in phony German marks, to dramatize the thought that a shirking production man now deserves more reward from Hitler than from Uncle Sam."

Most of the money earned by the workers in picking fruit will go into war bonds or to the Red Cross, it was reported.

California War Workers Picking Fruit Sundays

Some war-production workers in California are spending their Sundays harvesting fruit which would otherwise rot in the fields due to the shortage of farm labor.

The War Production Board, in making the announcement yesterday, explained that the suggestion, made by a worker in the Emeryville, Calif., plant of Paraffine Companies, Inc., immediately brought an excellent response from workers in the plant.

Congress to Get Report Today on Lend-Lease

President Roosevelt will transmit to Congress today the sixth quarterly report on lend-lease operations. It will include new data on advances of munitions and supplies to several additional members of the United Nations.

War Taxation

By Roswell Magill

A Tax Credit For Savings

The author is professor of law, Columbia University; former Undersecretary of U. S. Treasury; former adviser Cuban Treasury; former adviser Tax Commission, Puerto Rico, and author of texts on Federal taxation.

A PROPOSAL that married men with children receiving incomes of $5,000 or less should not be permitted to buy war bonds or to carry life insurance would rightly be regarded as the product of a humorist or a fool. Every hour every radio in the land urges the purchase of war bonds by every citizen. The 10 per cent credit on the nation's war production, the middle and lower brackets. Investment by all citizens in the United States Government itself is a major national policy. A corollary is encouragement to every family to accumulate its own reserve funds for a home, for sickness, for old age.

Every one knows that income taxes are high and will be higher. The important fact is not so much the present and proposed effective rates, but the tremendous increases in the past two or three years. In 1941, a married man with two dependent children and a $3,000 net income paid no income taxes; in 1942, he is paying $68 and under the bill as passed by the House, he will pay $172, nearly three times as much. If his net income was $5,000, the tax was successively, $75, $271 and $370. Particularly in a period of increasing living costs, the adjustment of a household budget to meet these imperative additional costs is not easy. To pay income taxes which have doubled or tripled in a year—and also to invest 10 per cent of one's salary in war bonds, and also to meet amortization payments on the mortgage on the home—and also to pay premiums on life insurance for one's dependents, may be almost an impossibility. Some of the cases of salaried men with state incomes entirely unaffected by the war, not so much in the cases of the newly prosperous.

Limited Tax Credit

If the danger of eliminating the possibility of savings by this group is real, as it surely seems to be, the obvious remedy is to provide a tax credit to make savings possible. It must be limited in scope to prevent a serious loss of revenue. But even a limited credit can be so designed as to bring about an investment in war bonds far larger than the tax cost.

Suppose the tax law provides that, in order to get any credit at all, the taxpayer must show that he has saved at least 10 per cent of his gross income. Savings for this purpose would include payments for war bonds, for insurance premiums, to a building and loan association or to reduce debt. Any saving in excess of the 10 per cent would entitle him to a credit of a portion of the tax on the income so used. The total possible "excess savings" could be limited to a fixed amount, say $100 or $200.

Having completed a foundation of understanding with the procurement agencies of the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission and the Treasury, the smaller plants division of the War Production Board yesterday announced that it was ready to proceed immediately with its functions in all parts of the country.

The new division, established by WPB Chairman Donald M. Nelson, will provide machinery for the widest possible spread of war work to the smaller manufacturing plants in the United States. Lou E. Holland heads the division.

The agency will be decentralized in the same manner as other War Production Board activities and the bulk of the personnel will be situated in field offices in every section of the Nation, it was explained.

It is planned to have a direct representative of the Smaller War Plants division in each of the 12 WPB regional offices and 127 branch offices.

"In each regional and field office, we want to have practical engineers, preferably with long machine shop and production experience, whose duty it will be to assist small business in participating in war work," Holland said today.

"This assistance will take the form of solicitation of subcontracts from prime contractors, guidance of sub-contractors in their application for subcontracts, and in the execution of them, and in other ways."

Holland, who is chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation created by the Murrey-Patman Act, explained his job by saying: "It should always be kept in mind that neither the War Production Board nor the Smaller War Plants Corp. can purchase a nickel's worth of war goods. We are a production agency, and our customer is Uncle Sam. For the past three weeks we have been conferring with procurement officers of the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission and the Treasury and settling this complex problem. All of this has now been accomplished, and we are ready to put the plan into operation."

Holland added he hopes that in many instances smaller plants adequately equipped to handle entire contracts will be given proper recognition. In other cases, contracts will be broken down and parts of them distributed to small firms. He explained:

"The only way smaller manufacturers ever could get into war production was by getting subcontracts, occasionally a prime contract for an individual firm and sometimes a prime contract for a group of small firms. The only thing we can do to provide more of these contracts—and the only difference in our approach from that which has been made by our predecessors is in method."

"Steps cannot be achieved overnight or by waving a magic wand. It is a long, hard road but it is the only one. If prime contractors will cooperate with us, as the procurement officers have promised to do, we shall provide increasingly with each month that goes by, that small manufacturers can make a real contribution to the war effort by preventing bottlenecks and by speeding up production."

The Once Over

Taxi! Taxi!

One-third of the taxicabs are to be taken off the streets of New York and other American cities by Government order September 20. This will save millions of gallons of gas and tons of rubber per year. The saving of human breath through arguments with cab drivers is beyond computation.

You can take a third of the cabs off the streets of New York and still have more than enough to keep pedestrians nervous.

There has been a cab to every person, with two in reserve and one to go ahead as a scout car.

Visitors to New York took one look at the taxi line-up and thought they were watching a production line.

For 20 years there has been talk of cutting down the number of cabs, but it has taken a war to get action. Eighty per cent of the noise in the city has been caused by taxi drivers arguing with customers, or with one another.

The Office of Defense Transportation has ordered the cab reduction. It will help win the war. How? By making it safer for war workers and service men to cross a street, for one thing.

The ODT also forbids taxicabs to cross a State line, but this is just wishful thinking. Once a taxicab driver gets in the suburbs he flies so high that all land marks become invisible.

It also orders taxicabs to limit their speed to 40 miles an hour. But not even a world war can bring that about. A taxi driver moving under 40 miles an hour thinks he is on fixed post.

In addition to all this, the ODT forbids a taxicab from going beyond 5 miles outside the corporate limits of the city or town where he is licensed to operate. That's plain foolishness. Those cabs travel so fast, once they near the corporate limits, that it takes them 10 miles to stop, even with air brakes.

The taxicab drivers are reported to be taking it as philosophically as profanity permits.

"It's okay," said one of them today. "All I ask is one satisfaction."

"What's that?" we asked.

"I just want to be near a theater on a rainy night when J. B. Eastman comes out of a performance and tries to get a cab!" he replied.

Our Negligence

By Mark Sullivan

The Sad Saga Of Rubber

THE WHOLE rubber story from the beginning is utterly saddening. The only relief in it is the latest development, the report of the Baruch committee, and the apparent promise of early action on the report. But even the Baruch report is only cheering under one condition—provided it inaugurates a sweeping change in the spirit in which our whole management of the war is conducted.

Our deprivation of rubber is as great a disaster—in the sheer military sense—as Pearl Harbor. Of the two, the former is the more humiliating. Our disaster at Pearl Harbor was due to sudden surprise by the enemy. Our lack of rubber is due to our own unforgivable negligence, prolonged over many months.

I find myself saying "we" and "our." I think I do this in some vague reluctance to place so tragic a blame on individuals. But it is not a thing that all of us were responsible for. The responsibility was on the persons conducting our Government.

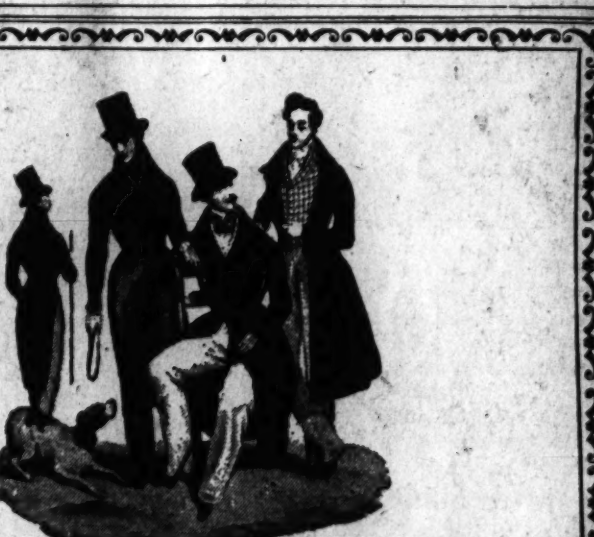

Go back to the beginning. We knew we were likely to have war with Japan. In August, 1941, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill talked about it, how soon it would come. Mr. Roosevelt said to Mr. Churchill, "I think I can baby them (the Japanese) along for three months." Three months later, November 26, 1941, we sent a note to Japan which, while not formally an ultimatum, had, in the circumstances, the spirit of one. We knew that our note, coupled with the circumstances, was likely to bring war. Our naval vessels in the Pacific were warned that war was likely.

That note was, in the circumstances, called for; it was proper to send—some time. But it ought never to have been sent until after we had satisfied ourselves about our rubber supply. We ought to have been absolutely certain of one of two things—either that we could beat Japan quickly, or that we were prepared about rubber. Since we could not be sure of the former, we ought to have made sure of the latter. As an absolute necessity, preliminary to war with Japan, we ought either to have accumulated a several years' supply of natural rubber, or to have had synthetic rubber factories ready to operate at the touch of a button. Failure to do either will stand as one of the gravest negligences in history.

But it was clear that whatever the facts, they were very grim. There followed weeks of controversy about how to make synthetic rubber, whether from petroleum or from alcohol, with charges and countercharges of bias on the part of persons in the Administration.

All that consumed the spring and early summer. It ended with passage by Congress of an act taking the rubber situation out of the hands of the persons whom President Roosevelt had appointed, and setting up another authority. This, President Roosevelt wanted to veto—with some reason, for it was not sound administrative practice. To justify his veto he at the same time set up the Baruch committee, to get the facts and make recommendations. By that time, we were at last on the right track. But that was the first week in August—eight months after Pearl Harbor. (The quotation of President Roosevelt's words above is from "How War Came," by Messrs. Lindley and Davis.)

Even after December 7, after we were at war with Japan, we still did not act. We ought to have

California War Workers Picking Fruit Sundays

Some war-production workers in California are spending their Sundays harvesting fruit which would otherwise rot in the fields due to the shortage of farm labor.

The War Production Board, in making the announcement yesterday, explained that the suggestion, made by a worker in the Emeryville, Calif., plant of Paraffine Companies, Inc., immediately brought an excellent response from workers in the plant.

Most of the money earned by the workers in picking fruit will go into war bonds or to the Red Cross, it was reported.

Headline—"Cards beat Dodgers, 3-0; Nazis dent Stalingrad."

That ought to give us a pretty good idea of the relative importance of world affairs in mid-September. The defense of Stalingrad, termed the greatest battle of history, gets second billing beneath the doings of the Dodgers. America will get around to this war pretty soon.

Meantime that National League pennant race is a beaut. Larry MacPhail, big boss of the Dodgers, may end up with a second place team on his hands, but he will have qualified as one of the great seers of baseball. MacPhail alone saw, a month ago, what may be the wall's handwriting for the Dodgers, although he was considerably pooh-poohed at the time by the Dodgers themselves.

That was when MacPhail called the Brooklyn team en masse up to his big press room and stormed that he didn't like the way they were playing ball. He didn't like it, even though they were leading by 7½ games and looked like a shoo-in for the pennant. "You're not playing good enough to win," shouted MacPhail. "You're gonna lose the pennant if you don't put out some more." That sounded, at the time, like rank heresy by a club president. "Dixie Walker even offered to bet me that we'd win the pennant by 10 games," MacPhail revealed later. "I didn't take the bet, because I don't want to win a ball player's money, but it illustrated just how cocky they were. Too cocky. Now look at 'em. If they win the pennant, they'll have to do it the hard way."

Cooper's Victory May Be Omen

For folks who like to discern omens in such matters, the Dodgers may have lost the pennant last Friday when Mort Cooper, of the Cards, shut Brooklyn out, 3-0, on three hits. He was pitching against Leo Durocher's best pitching bet, Whit Wyatt, and the Dodgers had been boasting a two-game lead before that contest. They had met once before, Cooper and Wyatt, in a crucial game. That was in 1941, when the Dodgers moved into St. Louis with a game-and-a-half lead. Wyatt beat Cooper, 2-1, that day and the Dodgers went on to win the pennant. The other day it was different, with Cooper the winner, and who knows but the Cardinals will go on to take the pennant?

The present plight of the Dodgers is certainly being enjoyed by the rest of the league. When the Brooklyn team was coasting along out in front, they made enemies all up and down the league with their bullying tactics. Lippy Leo Durocher gave the back of his hand to all of the Dodgers' opposition, and burned his bridges behind him. Now, in the crucial stretch of the pennant race, that strategy can well boomerang. Any little thing the Pirates, Reds, Giants, Braves and Phils can contribute to the discomfort of the Dodgers they will contribute gladly. The Dodgers were great once at handling it out, and now they'll have to answer the question: Can they take it? The Cardinals have stripped the Brooklyn of what had been an aura of invincibility and the lower clubs of the league can take heart. Already there are signs that the other clubs are out to "get" the Dodgers. The other day in Boston, for example, Manager Casey Stengel for the first time this season used his big, lefty-hitting catcher, Ernie Lombardi, in both games of a double-header against Brooklyn, the first time this season Lombardi has caught two games in a single day. They were stretching a point to beat the Dodgers.

Dodgers' Popularity Pales

A year ago, Brooklyn was the popular choice for the pennant. "Dem Bums" were amusing, and the man in the street was pulling for a Brooklyn pennant triumph. But the antics of Durocher and his bean-balling pitching staff has soured much of the populace on the Bums. Their popularity has paled. The Cardinals have never been a popular team in the same sense that the Dodgers were last year. A money-grubbing owner was rather thoroughly disliked. But any club that has a chance to beat out the Brooklyn has a claim on popularity.

President Ford Frick of the National League is in no position to voice any preference, but he may be forgiven for pulling for the Cardinals in the current situation. The yoke of American League supremacy in the World Series is beginning to rub, and Frick can see in the well-balanced Cardinals a team better able to contest with the Yankees than the slumping Brooklyn.

The chief disappointment in any loss of the pennant by the Dodgers would be the absence of Buck Newsom from the World Series. Newsom on the mound would be the high spot of any World Series. No matter what sort of a record he might take into a series, he'd be something to see out there pitching for the Dodgers against the Yankees. The big galoot would probably surpass himself. He was born to be a Dodger. It may come to pass, of course.

Chicards and Eagles Open With Victories

Chicago Pros Defeat Cleveland Rams, 7-0; Steve Lach Is Hero

By the Associated Press

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 13.—The Chicago Cardinals, driving 63 yards for a touchdown in the first period, defeated the Cleveland Rams, 7-0, today in a National Football League game before 18,098 spectators in Civic Stadium.

Steve Lach, Card right half, took Bud Schwenk's short pass in the end zone for the touchdown. Bill Daddio dropped back from left end to place kick the extra point.

The Cardinals struck swiftly after the Rams, taking the opening kickoff, knifed their way to the Card three-yard line on a 35-yard pass from Parker Hall to Jim Benton and a series of running plays. There Chicago held, hurred Cleveland back to the six and took the ball on downs.

After an exchange of punts, Schwenk, star passer for Washington University of St. Louis last season, intercepted Gaylon Smith's pass and returned 21 yards to the Card 37. Marshall Goldberg gained a yard on a play, then Schwenk heaved another to Lach. Lach batted the ball with his left hand and caught it across the payoff line behind Bill Conkright.

The Rams took to the air for the rest of the half. Hall picked up 35 yards on two successive passes to Benton and Johnny Wilson before Ray Apolakis ended the threat with an interception.

Schwenk's 23-yard dash in the fading minutes of the second period again placed the Cards in scoring position, but Cleveland held and Daddio's place kick from the 29 was wide.

Philadelphia Defeats Pittsburgh, 24-14; Thompson Stars

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Sept. 13.—The Philadelphia Eagles scored through the air to defeat the Pittsburgh Steelers, 24-14, in their opening National Professional Football League game.

Tosin' Tommy Thompson, Eagles' quarterback, star in Coach Earle "Boss" Neale's T-formation, completed 12 of 18 passes for 189 yards and was responsible for all three of the Eagles' touchdowns. Backfield Flash Len Barnum kicked a 24-yard field goal in the third period and converted two points after touchdowns.

Bill Dudley, University of Virginia All-American, made an impressive debut with the Steelers. He gained 49 yards from scrimmage and 40 from kickoffs. The Thompson was only 15 seconds old, rushed in a third touchdown for the Eagles in the final period.

The Steelers had 15 first downs to the Eagles' 14 and both teams totaled 171 yards on the ground.

Wes Ferrell Yanks Team Off Field in Protest

By the Associated Press

Newport News, Va., Sept. 13.—Newport News won the fifth game of its Shaughnessy playoff series with the Lynchburg Senators here today, 9-0, on a forfeit after umpires stopped the game in the first inning.

Manager Wesley Ferrell of Lynchburg, who used to have plenty of arguments when he was one of the best right-handers in the American League a few years ago, picked up his team's equipment and headed back to Lynchburg after Bobby Deese, Senator shortstop, had been banished from the game.

Newport News officials refunded admissions to the crowd of nearly 1,400 persons who attended. Banishment of Deese from the contest came after the player had figured in a close play at first base. Deese played a ground ball to Tom Madden, who threw high to Walter Mahoney at first base. As the ball came down, Deese and Mahoney collided, and the umpire ejected Deese for several minutes.

Baugh's Pass Ruled Complete: Redskins End Frank Kovatch dropped the pass by Sammy Baugh, pictured above, but the Redskins were given a 6-yard gain on the play when officials ruled that Danny Fortmann of the Bears had interfered with Kovatch. It happened in the first quarter. Fortmann obviously tackled Kovatch while the ball was still in the air.

Cards Split, Take Lead as Dodgers Drop Pair to Reds

Brooklyn Defeated, 6-3, 4-1; Redbirds Whip Phils, 3-2, After Losing, 2-1

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Sept. 13.—While 31,463 fans died slowly in their seats, the Dodgers dropped both games of a double-header to the Cincinnati Reds today, 6-3 and 4-1, to a full game behind the St. Louis Cardinals, who were dividing a twin bill with the Phils.

Only once during the afternoon did the Brooklyn rooters have a chance to cheer. Their moment came during the seventh inning of the opener, when the news was posted on the scoreboard that St. Louis had lost its first game to the Phils. There was nothing to alleviate their suffering during the nightcap.

First Bucky Walters and then Ray Starr, two right-handers, poured it on the once-haughty Dodgers. Walters allowed them six hits in the opener and fairly coasted to victory after Buck Newsom had been pelted from the mound. Starr yielded five blows in the second game, only one of which came after the second inning. The defeat were the fourth and fifth straight for the Dodgers.

Newsom, the Dodgers' pennant insurance, had every intention of turning the tide today. He had asked and received Manager Leo Durocher's permission to pitch both games—provided he won the first. As big Bobo started like a champion, fanning three Reds in the first inning.

Cardinals Split, Gain League Lead

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 13.—The St. Louis Cardinals camp within a hot breath of sweeping a double-header from the poor Phils today, and failed, even though they had to be content with winning one out of two the Redbirds roared into exclusive possession of first place in the National League by a full game.

The Cards were overzealous in the opening tussle, and gave the Phils two runs in the ninth inning to lose, 2 to 1, but they came back like champions in the second game and won, 3 to 2, to profit by the Brooklyn Dodgers' double loss against the Cincinnati Reds.

The stress of the exciting pennant struggle made everyone in Shibe Park tense—and there were a lot of people in the stands. The big show brought out a crowd of 20,798 fans, coming within a few hundred of being the biggest turnout of the year for the Phils, and they cheered every time the scoreboard posted runs for Cincinnati at Brooklyn.

The announcer even acknowledged the unusual circumstances by interrupting the play of the im-

Nats, Tigers Divide Bill; Wynn Victor

Special Dispatch to The Post

Detroit, Sept. 13.—Three runs in the ninth inning of the first game enabled Washington to win, 5 to 3, and to divide a double-header with Detroit here this afternoon. The Tigers drove Alexander Cartasquel from the mound while taking the second game, 8 to 0.

Early Wynn was a route-going pitcher in the Nats' victory. His winning margin was provided in large part through the generous cooperation of Dixon Parsons and Rudy York of the Detroit side.

With the score tied at 2-all, John Sullivan opened the ninth with his third hit, a single to left. Ellis Clary waited for a pass and both runners advanced on a passed ball committed by Parsons while Harold Newhouse was about the business of fanning Wynn.

George Case purposely walked, filling the bases. Stanley Spence hit a grounder to York, who fumbled in his anxiety to make a play at the plate. Sullivan scored on the error and the bases remained loaded.

Bruce Campbell also drove a grounder to York. The ball skipped right field, while Clary and Case

Louis will train at Greenwood Lake, N. Y., where he prepped for many of his 21 successful title defenses, and Conn, who was knocked out by Louis in 13 rounds in their first meeting on June 18, 1941, will train at Promoter Mike Jacobs' estate in Rumson, N. J.

Louis arrived in New York yesterday from Chicago where he had been on a furlough finishing basic training duties at Fort Riley, Kansas. Conn is stationed at Fort Wadsworth, and already was on hand.

Bears' Big Victory Excites Neither Redskins Nor Bears

By Bill Burnett

Aside to Redskins fans: Don't be unhappy, chums! It was only an exhibition.

Even the Chicago Bears, after they'd pinned back our Redskins' ears by 24-14 in yesterday's doings at Griffith Stadium, weren't very impressed with themselves. In the steamy privacy of their dressing room they even gave our Redskins more credit than most of the crowd of 35,000.

"We were lucky," Sid Luckman said, probably quoting from something he'd read somewhere. The only member of the Bears with a sea pulled off several more pieces of harness and enlarged: "Every conceivable break came our way. We all know it, and so do the Redskins. There's that little matter of making your own breaks... but I won't mention it. Anyway, it was only an exhibition."

The Chicago Bears turned opportunities yesterday and in full view of 35,076 fans who swelled in Griffith Stadium the pro champs knocked the Redskins out of their dream world and then rubbed it in. By a 38-14 count the Chicagoans won the exhibition game, one which will not enter the standings—for which the Redskins are truly thankful.

The Bears did not need their vaunted power for touchdowns. They scored twice on pass interceptions, once on a fumble and a third score was made possible by another of the four Sammy Baugh passes which found their way into Bear hands.

Speedster Ray McLean and Rookie Charlie O'Rourke, the former Boston College flash who appears to be the pro football find of 1942, made the day's most sensational runs, both from pass interceptions. McLean romped 53 yards in the second period and O'Rourke produced a 98-yard touchdown dash in the dying moments when the Redskins were in the final stages of a downfield march.

Todd, Farkas Hurt The Redskins, who lost Andy Farkas and Dick Todd by injuries early in the first period, proved to be a first quarter ball club. They took a 14-7 lead in the second quarter and then retired from the scoring column as the Bears rolled up a 31-0 margin through the last three periods, reminiscent of the 1940 championship play-off.

Both teams scored a cheap touchdown but the other Redskins tally, which tied the score midway in the first quarter, was a Bob Seymour specialty, a beautiful piece of cutting and slicing away from Bear tacklers, out of one trap after another for 38 yards to the end zone.

The Bears took to half-time intermission with a 28-14 lead and it was fairly obvious that they were home. The third period was a non-productive 15 minutes for both clubs and the T-machine sealed their practice game triumph, which left them the only unbeaten club of pro football's "Grapefruit League" with Frank Maznicki's 24-yard field goal in the final minutes.

O'Rourke Impressive O'Rourke, who ran the Bear machine while Sid Luckman was resting, made a lasting impression on the fans, and the Redskins, while in his first competitive appearance in a Redskins uniform Steve Jurwik won outstanding rookie honors for Coach Ray Fisher's gang with several first-down dashes in his spinning, weaving style of running.

A murmur of 73 to 0 swept through the capacity crowd as the Bears required a minimum of 2 minutes and 10 seconds to take a 7-0 lead. Sammy Baugh started passing from his own 37-yard line and his long attempt was half blocked by surprised hands of the Bear line. The ball wobbled and Bill Osmanski picked it up and was almost away, finally being brought down on the Redskins 22. Ray McLean teased the Redskins with a 3-yard gain.

The Bears sent two men out to the right on the very next play and Osmanski took the ball from Luckman on a fake and romped over the weak side of the Redskins line for 22 yards without opposition.

T-Formation Still Puzzle To Redskins

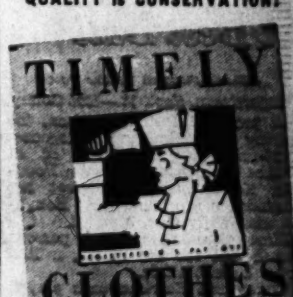

Still unsolved by the Redskins are the mysteries of the T-formation, it was evident yesterday at Griffith Stadium where the Chicago Bears flim-flammed their way to their 38-14 victory.

Redskin ends were bamboozled by the Bears' man-in-motion plays and the passage of two years brought the Redskins no closer to solution of the Bears' double-dealing ball-handling. The Bears' trickery paid off in the first 15 minutes when with the Chicago lined up in right formation Bill Osmanski ran to the left without blockers on that side to gallop 22 yards to a touchdown, running over little Man Sieve Jurwik as if the latter were not there.

The Redskins rolled up 11 first downs to the Bears' seven, but they lacked the dynamite of the Bears' attack. After the Bears had sufficiently panicked the Redskins with their flank passes in the man in motion and the stationary end on the flank, Sid Luckman pitched his masterpiece to little Ray McLean for the

That ought to give us a pretty good idea of the relative importance of world affairs in mid-September. The defense of Stalingrad, termed the greatest battle of history, gets second billing beneath the doings of the Dodgers. America will get around to this war pretty soon.

Meantime that National League pennant race is a beaut. Larry MacPhail, big boss of the Dodgers, may end up with a second place team on his hands, but he will have qualified as one of the great seers of baseball. MacPhail alone saw, a month ago, what may be the wall's handwriting for the Dodgers, although he was considerably pooch-pooched at the time by the Dodgers themselves.

That was when MacPhail called the Brooklyn team en masse up to his big press room and stormed that he didn't like the way they were playing ball. He didn't like it, even though they were leading by 7½ games and looked like a shoo-in for the pennant. "You're not playing good enough to win," shouted MacPhail. "You're gonna lose the pennant if you don't put out some more." That sounded, at the time, like rank heresy by a club president. "Dixie Walker even offered to bet me that we'd win the pennant by 10 games," MacPhail revealed later. "I didn't take the bet, because I don't want to win a ball player's money, but it illustrated just how cocky they were. Too cocky. Now look at 'em. If they win the pennant, they'll have to do it the hard way."

Cooper's Victory May Be Omen

For folks who like to discern omens in such matters, the Dodgers may have lost the pennant last Friday when Mort Cooper, of the Cards, shut Brooklyn out, 3-0, on three hits. He was pitching against Leo Durocher's best pitching bet, Whit Wyatt, and the Dodgers had been boasting a two-game lead before that contest. They had met once before, Cooper and Wyatt, in a crucial game. That was in 1941, when the Dodgers moved into St. Louis with a game-and-a-half lead. Wyatt beat Cooper, 2-1, that day and the Dodgers went on to win the pennant. The other day it was different, with Cooper the winner, and who knows but the Cardinals will go on to take the pennant?

The present plight of the Dodgers is certainly being enjoyed by the rest of the league. When the Brooklyn were coasting along in front, they made enemies all up and down the league with their bullying tactics. Lippy Leo Durocher gave the back of his hand to all of the Dodgers' opposition, and burned his bridges behind him. Now, in the crucial stretch of the pennant race, that strategy can well boomerang. Any little thing the Pirates, Reds, Giants, Braves and Phils can contribute to the discomfort of the Dodgers they will contribute gladly. The Dodgers were great ones at handing it out, and now they'll have to answer the question: Can they take it? The Cardinals have stripped the Brooklyn of what had been an aura of invincibility and the lower clubs of the league can take heart. Already there are signs that the other clubs are out to "get" the Dodgers. The other day in Boston, for example, Manager Casey Stengel for the first time this season used his big, hefty-hitting catcher, Ernie Lombardi, in both games of a double-header against Brooklyn, the first time this season Lombardi has caught two games in a single day. They were stretching a point to beat the Dodgers.

Dodgers' Popularity Pales

A year ago, Brooklyn was the popular choice for the pennant. "Dem Bums" were anent, and the street was mulling for a Brooklyn pennant triumph. But the antics of Durocher and his bean-balling pitching staff has soured much of the populace on the Bums. Their popularity has paled. The Cardinals have never been a popular team in the same sense that the Dodgers were last year. A money-grubbing owner was rather thoroughly disliked. But any club that has a chance to beat out the Brooklyn has a claim on popularity.

President Ford Frick of the National League is in no position to voice any preference, but he may be forgiven for pulling for the Cardinals in the current situation. The yoke of American League supremacy in the World Series is beginning to rub, and Frick can see in the well-balanced Cardinals' team better able to contest with the Yankees than the slumping Brooklyn.

The chief disappointment in any loss of the pennant by the Dodgers would be the absence of Buck Newsom from the World Series. Newsom on the mound would be the high spot of any World Series. No matter what sort of a record he might take into a series, he'd be something to see out there pitching for the Dodgers against the Yankees. The big galoot would probably surpass himself. He was born to be a Dodger. It may come to pass, of course.

Chicago Pros Defeat Cleveland Rams, 7-0; Steve Lach Is Hero

By the Associated Press

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 13.—The Chicago Cardinals, driving 63 yards for a touchdown in the first period, defeated the Cleveland Rams, 7-0, today in a National Football League game before 18,988 spectators in Civic Stadium.

Steve Lach, Card right half, took Bud Schwenk's short pass in the end zone for the touchdown. Bill Daddio dropped back from left end to place kick the extra point.

The Cardinals struck swiftly after the Rams, taking the opening kickoff, knifed their way to the Card three-yard line on a 35-yard pass from Parker Hall to Jim Benton and a series of running plays. There Chicago held, hurled Cleveland back to the six and took the ball on downs.

After an exchange of punts, Schwenk, star passer for Washington University of St. Louis last season, intercepted Gaylon Smith's pass and returned 21 yards to the Card 37. Marshall Goldberg gained a yard on a plunge. On third down Schwenk tossed a pass to Lach, who cut through a broken field to the Cleveland nine.

Goldberg gained 3 yards in two attempts. Then Schwenk heaved another to Lach. Lach batted the ball with his left hand and caught it across the payoff line behind Bill Conkright.

The Rams took to the air for the rest of the half. Hall picked up 26 yards on two successive passes to Benton and Johnny Wilson before Ray Apolokis ended the threat with an interception.

Schwenk's 23-yard dash in the fading minutes of the second period again placed the Cards in scoring position, but Cleveland held and Daddio's place kick from the 39 was wide.

Philadelphia Defeats Pittsburgh, 24-14; Thompson Stars

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Sept. 13.—The Philadelphia Eagles soared through the airwaves with ease today to defeat the Pittsburgh Steelers, 24-14, in their opening National Professional Football League game.

Toslin Tommy Thompson, Eagles' quarterback star in Coach Earle "Boss" Neale's T-formation, completed 12 of 18 passes for 169 yards and was responsible for all three of the Eagles' touchdowns. Backfield Flash Len Barnum kicked a 24-yard field goal in the third period and converted two points after touchdowns for the Eagles.

Bill Dudley, University of Virginia All-American, made an impressive debut with the Steelers. He gained 107 yards from scrimmage and only 55 seconds old when Dudley ran 44 yards through right guard for a touchdown. With only 20 seconds remaining in the fourth quarter, Dudley hurried a touchdown pass to Ed Don Lohney in the end zone for the Steelers' other score.

Thompson's pass to End Fred Meyer paved the way for the first Eagles' touchdown, scored on a 23-yard pass from Thompson. The Thompson-Meyer combination resulted in a third touchdown for the Eagles in the final period. The Steelers had 15 first downs to the Eagles' 14 and both teams totaled 171 yards on the ground.

Wes Ferrell Yanks Team Off Field in Protest

By the Associated Press

Newport News, Va., Sept. 13.—Newport News won the fifth game of its Shughnessy playoff series with the Lynchburg Senators here today, 4-0, on a forfeit after umpires stopped the game in the first inning.

Manager Wesley Ferrell of Lynchburg, who used to have plenty of arguments when he was one of the best right-handers in the American League a few years ago, picked up his team's equipment and headed back to Lynchburg after Bobby Deese, Senator shortstop, had been banished from the game.

Newport News officials refunded admissions to the crowd of nearly 1,400 persons who attended. Banishment of Deese from the contest came after the player had argued in a close play at first base. Deese slapped a ground ball to Tom Madden, who threw high to Walter Mahoney at first base. As the ballster first baseman came down with the ball, Deese and Mahoney collided, and the umpire stepped in to break up the fight. Deese was knocked out for several minutes.

Baugh's Pass Ruled Complete: Redskins End Frank Kovatch dropped the pass by Sammy Baugh, pictured above, but the Redskins were given a 6-yard gain on the play when officials ruled that Danny Fortmann of the Bears had interfered with Kovatch. It happened in the first quarter. Fortmann obviously tackled Kovatch while the ball was still in the air.

Cards Split, Take Lead as Dodgers Drop Pair to Reds

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Sept. 13.—While 31,468 fans died slowly in their seats, the Dodgers dropped both games of a double-header to the Cincinnati Reds today, 6-3 and 4-1, to a full game behind the St. Louis Cardinals, who were dividing a twin bill with the Phils.

Only once during the afternoon did the Brooklyn rooters have a chance to cheer. Their moment came during the seventh inning of the opener, when the news was posted on the scoreboard that St. Louis had lost its first game to the Phils. There was nothing to alleviate their suffering during the nightcap.

First Bucky Walters and then Ray Starr, two righthanders, poured it on the once-hungry Dodgers. Walters allowed them six hits in the opener and fairly coasted to victory after Buck Newsome had been pelted from the mound. Starr yielded five blows in the second game, only one of which came after the second inning. The defeats were the fourth and fifth straight for the Dodgers.

Newsom, the Dodgers' "pennant insurance" had every intention of turning the tide today. He had asked and received Manager Leo Durocher's permission to pitch both games—provided he won the first. And Big Boy started like a champion, fanning three Reds in the first inning.

But it didn't last. Eric Tipton, Red

Philadelphia, Sept. 13.—The St. Louis Cardinals camp within a hot breath of sweeping a double-header from the poor Phils today, and failed, even though they had to be content with winning one out of two the Redbirds roared into exclusive possession of first place in the National League by a full game.

The Cards were overanxious in the opening tussle, and gave the Phils two runs in the ninth inning to lose, 2 to 1, but they came back like champions in the second game and won, 3 to 2, to profit by the Brooklyn Dodgers' double loss against the Cincinnati Reds.

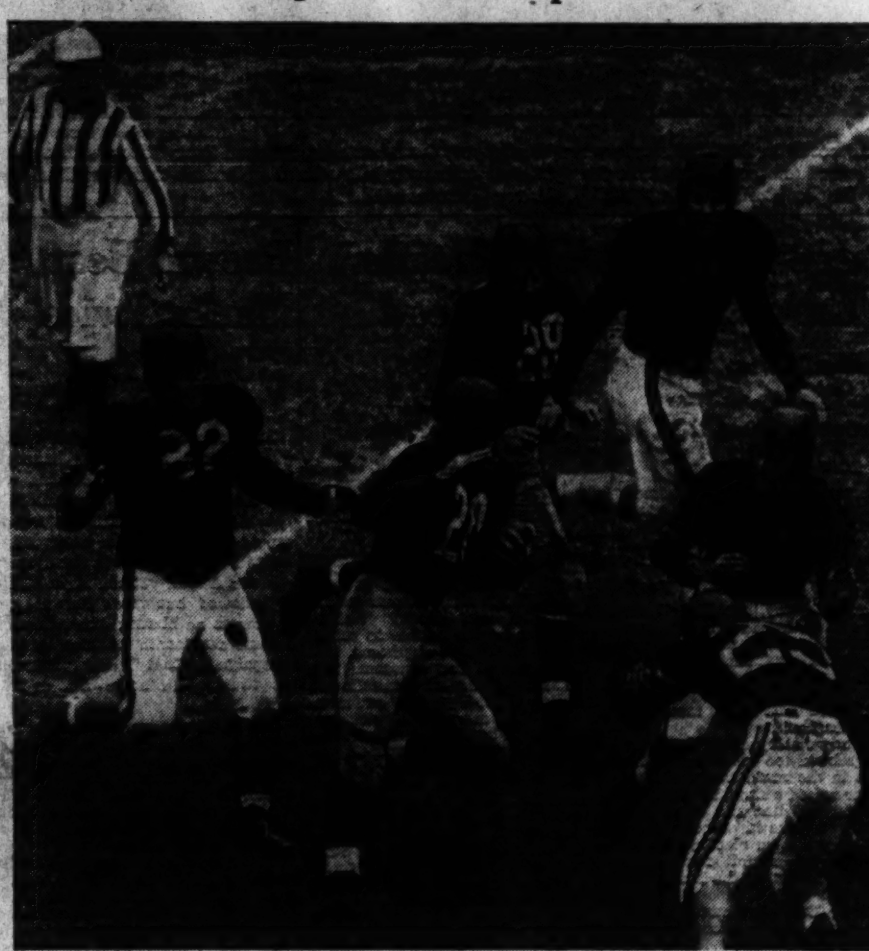

The stress of the exciting pennant struggle made everyone in Shibe Park tense—and there were a lot of people in the stands. The big show brought out a crowd of 20,798 fans, coming within a few hundred of being the biggest turnout of the year for the Phils, and they cheered every time the scoreboard posted runs for Cincinnati at Brooklyn.

The announcer even acknowledged the unusual circumstances by interrupting the play of the important game.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Detroit, Sept. 13.—Three runs in the ninth inning of the first game enabled Washington to win, 5 to 3, and to divide a double-header with Detroit here this afternoon. The Tigers drove Alexander Carrasquel from the mound while taking the second game, 8 to 0.

Early Wynn was a route-gone pitcher in the Nats' victory. His winning margin was provided in large part through the generous cooperation of Dixon Parsons and Rudy York of the Detroit side.

With the score tied at 2-all, John Sullivan opened the ninth with his third hit, a single to left. Ellis Clary waited for a pass and both runners advanced on a passed ball committed by Parsons while Harold Newhouse was about the business of fanning Wynn.

George Case purposefully walked, filling the bases. Stanley Spence hit a grounder to York, who fumbled in his anxiety to make a play at the plate. Sullivan scored on the error and the bases remained loaded.

Brace Campbell also drove a grounder to York. The ball skipped right field, while Clary and Case

Louis will train at Greenwood Lake, N. Y., where he prepared for many of his 21 successful title defenses, and Conn, who was knocked out by Louis in June 1938, will train at Promoter Mike Jacobs' estate in Rumson, N. J.

Louis arrived in New York yesterday from Chicago where he had been on a furlough finishing basic training duties at Fort Riley, Kansas. Conn is stationed at Fort Wadsworth, and already was on hand.

Bears' Big Victory Excites. Neither Redskins Nor Bears

By Bill Burnett

Aside to Redskin fans: Don't be unhappy, chumps! It was only an exhibition.

Even the Chicago Bears, after they'd pinned back our Redskins' ears by 38-14 in yesterday's doings at Griffith Stadium, weren't very impressed with themselves. In the steamy privacy of their dressing room they even gave our Redskins more credit than most of the crowd of 35,000.

"We were lucky," Sid Luckman said, probably quoting from something he'd read somewhere. The only member of the Bears who was a fan pulled off several more pieces of harness and enlarged: "Every conceivable break came our way. We all know it, and so do the Redskins. There's that little matter of making your own breaks . . . but I won't mention it. Anyway, it was only an exhibition."

Ben Newsham, the party wingman from George Washington, also tried to be kind to our Redskins. Through a soggy towel he allowed, "Every team in the league has fallen off. That's the way. I guess we're fortunate in losing only about 10 per cent of our strength, while most of the other clubs have lost 40 per cent or so." (Let's see . . . 40 per cent less than last year leaves the Redskins with . . . ?) Roosevelt Wrote Inflation Message Himself

Inside truth about the President's Labor Day message on inflation is that he wrote it himself over the weekend after his aides had written draft after draft, failed to agree among themselves on any of them.

When the President decided to ask Congress to give him broader authority to control prices, he had on his desk an opinion from the Department of Justice, saying he had power to act without further legislation. But he also had memoranda from several of his most trusted advisers, urging him not to override congressional insistence on 110 per cent of parity by executive order.

The men who supposedly had been drafting the inflation program didn't know what the decision was until the message went to Congress.

Note: One of the early advocates of an "economic czar" was Leon Henderson, who saw this as a means of curbing the War Labor Board and checking the rise of wages. But when the President's drafters framed the order creating a czar, this czar had power, also, over Henderson's Office of Price Administration. So at the end Henderson was a violent opponent of over-all economic control centered in one man.

Alaskan Attacks

The Senate Military Affairs Committee got some encouraging news when it met behind closed doors the other day to hear the report of a subcommittee which has just returned from an inspection tour of our Alaskan fortifications.

For military reasons, the greater part of the report cannot be revealed. However, this much can be told:

The subcommittee, composed of Senators Happy Chandler of Kentucky, Mon Wallgren of Washington and Rufus Holman of Oregon, was unanimous in declaring that our aerial defenses in Alaska were strong enough to repel any attempted Jap invasion.

Remarkable progress has been made since Pearl Harbor in establishing new land and sea bases in the Alaskan area. The three Senators also paid high tribute to the morale and skill of U. S. airmen, who are forced to fly in the worst kinds of weather conditions.

Though refusing to predict on how soon we can start an all-out air offensive to drive the Japs from their footholds in the Aleutians, the subcommittee reported that one obstacle which has been holding up such an offensive has now been licked.

Hitherto we have been unable to send protective convoys of fighting planes with bombers raiding Jap positions in the Aleutians, because our fighters do not have the flying range for the 1000-mile round trip from the Army base at Unalakleet, nearest outpost to the Japs. However, this problem has been solved by the installation of "belly" gas tanks on fighters. They carry several hundred gallons of fuel and can be dropped after they are emptied.

The subcommittee also reported that interference with Army and Navy radio communications in the Alaskan area, caused by bad weather and the Aurora Borealis, was being largely circumvented by compass flying.

Political Economy

Hard-working Representative John H. Folger of North Carolina will go the limit for a constituent, but a recent request from a job seeker in his district almost got him down. The job seeker wrote:

"I have filed an application with Civil Service Commission for a position as an economist."

"I am a farmer of many years' experience and believe I am eminently qualified for the job I'm after."

"I have practiced economy all my life."

Government officials are no longer airing their differences of opinion in public, but they are still having them. Just the same, latest undercover row at WPB is between Ernest Kanzler, brother-in-law of Edsel Ford and new director general of operations, and J. A. Krug, head of the priorities division, over control of the flow of materials to war production.

Krug wants to tighten the reins, take from the Army and Navy the powers they have been exercising, and have WPB actually "get tough."

Kanzler, on the other hand, wants to let individual companies have greater freedom and responsibility, even to the extent of giving them large quantities of materials and letting them control, to a large degree, the flow of production from their plants.

It was Kanzler's appointment as director of operations that precipitated labor's recent protest to Donald Nelson over its lack of voice in WPB matters. Labor's dislike of Kanzler dates back to the day when he was a Ford executive.

More recently he incurred the distrust of union leaders when he intervened with Nelson to keep him from exposing and penalizing General Motors for using critical materials to make civilian refrigerators in violation of WPB regulations. The violation had been discovered and reported by union officials, but Kanzler told Nelson it would be bad for the country's morale to let it be known that labor had caught management off base.

Kanzler also was responsible for a WPB decision to retain certain facilities for manufacturing automobile engines instead of converting all to war work. His reason: He believes that some time during the war a "flying submarine" will be invented able to operate in the air or under the water, and that automobile engines will be needed to propel it.

There has been no decision yet in the priorities dispute between Krug and Kanzler, but one of the factors which has gummed the priorities situation so far has been permitting individual companies to stock up with large quantities of steel and other scarce materials with no check on them by the Government.

Religion Is 'Second Front' for Peace, Clergyman Declares

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

Religion is the "second front" that will help win the peace after the military victory, the Rev. Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer said yesterday in his sermon at Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, 1410 Columbia Road Northwest.

The church, he said, must be the "second front" that will provide the leadership in restoring sanity to a chaotic postwar world, and in aiding mankind make practical adjustments to a peaceful way of life.

Religion is also a "second front" that will help us conquer many evil habits, said the clergyman, and offered as an illustration a story of a successful business man who had become an alcoholic, and appealed to his minister to help him conquer the habit.

"All of life's best strategists are agreed," continued Dr. Buschmeyer, "that it is possible to win victories on obvious fronts and still lose the final victory, because of failure to give reinforcement to the spiritual 'second front' maintained by religion."

Federation Leader Speaks
The churches are the Nation's greatest health centers, Dr. Frederick E. Reissig declared yesterday in his first formal address since becoming new Washington Federation of Churches' executive secretary.

Dr. Reissig spoke at community vespers in the new Argo Village apartment development in north Arlington County, one of the areas being studied by the new department of Church Surveys and Planning of the Federation of Churches.

"The church was born in days of crisis, and therefore, has the most to offer in the midst of crisis," said the secretary. "In these days when health facilities are inadequate; when doctors, nurses and hospital beds are insufficient to meet the demand, we need to preserve our health."

The faith and fellowship of the Christian churches prevent our fears and worries from getting the better of us. Purely from selfish reasons men ought to be in the churches."

Dr. Reissig reminded the church "is constantly holding out to disillusioned humanity rays of hope for a better day when nations will understand how to live together peaceably."

"The Christian Church, especially in England, where all buildings have been destroyed and Christians have suffered, is illustrating most gloriously how faith can overcome hate and revenge and look toward a new day of equity and justice for all people of every race and clan."

"In every community," concluded the Federation leader, "the church must awaken to her task of giving men and women faith and hope for these dark days, and help them to keep their hearts Christian toward all mankind."

Pastor Explains Faith

In his first sermon since returning from vacation, the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Sheerin, pastor of century-old Epiphany Episcopal church, 1217 G street northwest, said, in part:

"Faith is so often a misunderstood term, that I feel particularly in these war times it should be continuous subject of investigation and study on the part of religious people and those desiring to be."

"Faith in general does not necessarily mean a Christian faith. As a matter of fact, the nations we are fighting have great faith based upon foundations which are anything but Christian."

Addressing annual home-coming day at the tall-pillared National City Christian Church at Thomas Circle, the Rev. Dr. J. Warren Hastings, new pastor, reminded that "the church of Jesus Christ is in no way comparable to a civic club or a fraternal organization or a welfare society."

Church Is God at Work

"The church is God at work in the world and every individual who has a part in its program is a coworker with God," he asserted.

"The heart of the church," he continued, "is its faith in Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the world, faith in men as our brothers, faith in God as a love."

"Religion is the 'second front' that will win the peace"

ing heavenly Father, eternal faith in the fact that Jesus and truth ultimately will reign over injustice and falsehood.

"The church has a mission in the world. One reason it lives and moves is because it must carry out a great commission. The church with its message is the rejuvenating force of society. If mankind is to be lifted to new levels of justice and good will it will be because of the dynamic life of the church of Jesus Christ."

Preaching yesterday at the Washington Cathedral, Canon Missioner Charles W. F. Smith said, in part:

"Godly fear (awe) is a duty laid upon all who call themselves Christians, and is the first ingredient of, not simply victory, but of a New Age."

Personal fear, he said, "bothers us because the world is organized about us. We are the center of our own interests and what affects us unfavorably we call bad. It is only when some greater interest than self radically changes our center that we overcome personal fears."

Faith vs. Bullets

"This is what is happening at home and abroad today. The danger of meeting a bullet is a normal and proper cause for fear and those who propel the bullets are evil to me. But when the cause in which we stand becomes paramount, then the fear of bullets is overcome and we face them willingly, because the evil that threatens is not simply a selfish evil but one which threatens something greater than us of which we are part. . . . A personal fear of inconvenience will not make us play the game with our gas and tires. But a fear of danger to a national ideal, a fear that freedom throughout the world will make us submit gladly."

"We ought to be afraid. We must be afraid. We must fully and rightly estimate the danger which faces us. Not a personal fear based on what is evil to us and threatens our own comfort or convenience, but with godly fear which fears for the ultimate sanctities of human life redeemed by the God of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The hope for the future world lies in "religious living" of peoples of all faiths, the Rev. Dr. Seth R. Brooks said in his first sermon since returning to the pulpit of the Universalist National Memorial Church, following a vacation.

"Religious living," he declared, "means a definite attitude toward life, motivated by moral, ethical and spiritual principles."

"The religious man has made

DR. CHARLES W. SHEERIN

Appeals for restudy of meaning of our faith

an enduring adjustment to life. Life cannot get him down. Success and prosperity cannot spoil him. Failure and defeat cannot crush him. His mind is made up on certain things—duty to God, to man and to himself."

Condemned's Letter Read

If ever the world is improved, there must be more self-sacrifice, said the pastor, and people must be willing to put aside the idea of "personal gain" for the "larger good."

The touching letter which a Dutch boy wrote to his parents before he faced a Nazi firing squad was used as the basis of a sermon, entitled "Dying at Dawn," which the Rev. Dr. Gould J. Wickey preached yesterday at Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle.

Dr. Wickey, guest speaker, is a member of the Luther Place congregation and is general secretary of the Council of Church Boards of Education, with headquarters here.

The letter he cited was a plea to the lad's family to keep faith in God and in the ultimate victory of good over evil. Such a letter, said Dr. Wickey, serves to remind us of the need of getting right with God in our personal, community, national and international lives, and to maintain a courageous faith."

The Luther Place Church Council held a special meeting after worship services to formally accept, with deep regret, the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Charles B. Foelsch as pastor. Dr. Foelsch has accepted a call to become president of Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Klotz

Walter Armstrong To Be Named to Board

Walter Armstrong of Memphis, former president of the American Bar Association, will be appointed to the vacancy on the Board of Legal Examiners... Latest rumor on the new St. Louis Hotel: that either the Army or the Navy will take it over to house officers stationed here... Federal Bureau of Investigation still is angling for space in the District of Columbia Armory building. It plans to move its fingerprint section to the building and if it does it'll call off the night shifts... National Labor Relations Board soon won't have an information division, Mike Ross and Jack Durham both will join the Office of War Information.

A Justice official gave a young lawyer an important war job to work on. The job was one of these very urgent things. The lawyer worked on it hard and long. Then he made his report. Weeks went by and he heard nothing from the report. Finally, after five months, the official returned the report, but attached was a memo that read: "This is a fine job but it's out of date."

Two years ago a woman had no chance whatsoever to get a messenger job in the Federal service. A year ago about 6 to 10 women a month were getting the jobs. Now it has jumped from 150 to 200 a month and the eligible register is fast being depleted. A new Civil Service exam is now open for women applicants. They must live within a radius of 50 miles of Washington. The entrance salary has been boosted from $1200 to $1320. Girls 16 and up are eligible to apply. The exam also is open to boys 16 and up.

A new stenographer was given a statement and told to make seven copies of it. It was a hurry-up job. The statement was to be used at many of the many conferences of officials. However, the stenographer put in the carbon paper face up. She sent along the copies with a note stating that she was sorry, but the reversed copies could be easily read by either holding them up to the light or by using a mirror.

This circular recently was sent around at the Justice Department: "Section 3 of the regulations covering travel of officers and employees of the United States for China is hereby amended to the extent that the per diem in lieu of subsistence rates of $6, $5, $4 and $3.50 are hereby changed to $7, $6, $5.50 and $5 respectively." That's all very fine but the court isn't now operating in China.

A young Government official sought a commission in the Navy. He had the backing of a long list of prominent officials, including Cabinet members. But he was turned down, and the reason given by Navy officials was that he "has a New Dealer".... The President has ordered that Census Bureau special agents engaged in collecting cotton statistics be exempted from Civil Service. The President's order which will require less essential Federal agencies to give up their surplus supplies and equipment to the all-out war agencies was effective October 15. Meanwhile, the Budget Bureau and Procurement Division are making a check of the materials on hand.

Ernest Kautzler appears to be headed for a scrap at War Production Board if he attempts to sponsor an industry-controlled production scheduling plan. Bucking him, it's reported, will be John Lord O'Brien, general counsel; J. A. Krug, priorities board; and Alex Henderson. They all believe the Government should do the scheduling and they're opposed to the "little NRA" for industry.

The pressure on the Civil Service Commission to produce employees for the War Department here continues. If anything, the heat is becoming more intense. The commission has orders with the commission for from 6000 to 8000 additional employees for its offices here and the commission is finding it more and more difficult to persuade people to come to Washington and help with the war and the battle of Washington. War Department brass here, it's reported, are now convinced that they must speed up the expanding units out of the city unless the people can be persuaded here and already decentralization surveys are under way.

Formation of Catholic Vet Post to Be Discussed

Formation of a District of Columbia Department of Catholic War Veterans will be discussed at a meeting tonight at 8:15 o'clock in the Knights of Columbus Hall, 7th and D streets Northwest. Leaders of the Father Francis J. McGarry, Dalgley, Brady and George Catholic War Veterans will attend the meeting.

No Strike Vow Given by 3000 Cabmen

Little Inconvenience Expected From Work Stoppage Called for Tonight

More than 3000 taxi drivers have promised not to participate in the general cab strike called for midnight tomorrow by the cab drivers union, John H. Royer, Jr., president of the Combined Cab Services, said last night.

"I don't believe there is going to be any strike," Royer said, pointing out that there are not more than 4000 taxi operators in the District. He indicated that a ruling by the Office of Price Administration Saturday, easing tire restrictions for cab drivers, had greatly mollified drivers who threatened to take their vehicles off the streets.

He said drivers of several companies, including the Yellow Cab Co., had signed pledges "100 per cent" not to strike.

Edwin A. Glenn, president of the United Taxicab Drivers, Inc., said the no-strike pledges obtained by Royer were "meaningless" and were signed by many drivers under duress.

The pledges read in part: "For the duration of the war I consider it my patriotic duty to work my cab regularly so that Government officials and defense workers will be sure of transportation during this great national emergency. By fulfilling this pledge I intend to do my part to 'Keep 'Em Flying' and keep the country going."

Cathedral To Honor First U. S. Bishop

A special service in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the first consecration of a bishop on American soil—Bishop Thomas John Caggett of Maryland—will be held in Washington Cathedral Sunday afternoon. During the past week he has been honored in memoriam in several nearby churches which were identified with his life. The Sunday service in Washington Cathedral, however, will mark the national observance of the anniversary of his consecration.

The bodies of both Bishop Caggett and his wife rest in the crypts of the Bethlehem Chapel at the Cathedral. The marker of the original grave, which was brought here from Crook, Md., in 1898 along with the remains, bears an epitaph written by Francis Scott Key. Bishop Caggett also is commemorated in the Cathedral in the magnificent wood carving on the present bishop's stall which depicts his consecration.

Lieut. G. T. Rogers Now Reported 'Safe and Unhurt'

Lieut. Gerald Talbot Rogers, 21, son of Capt. Henry Mead Rogers, U.S.A., and Mrs. Rogers, 2803 Cortland Place Northwest, who was reported missing in action in the southwest Pacific on August 25, is "safe and unhurt" at an unidentified location, according to an official notification received by his family.

Lieut. Rogers, a native of Hamburg, N. Y., enlisted in the Army Air Force in January, 1941, and received his commission last December. He was stationed in Panama before being transferred to the Pacific.

United Nations To Rule Europe, Institute Told

The subject nations of Europe must be freed from coercive influences which impede their cultural and economic progress, while the establishment of a democratic structure must be supervised by the United Nations, Dr. Oscar Jaszi, of Oberlin College, told delegates to the Institute on World Organization at American University yesterday.

The speaker pointed out two fundamental tendencies in Europe which must be satisfied "if we wish to eliminate the pathology of nationalism; the principle of national self-determination, and the trend toward economic and political integration."

"The nation-states in their present form are as anachronistic as were the many kingdoms and imperial cities before the integration of the nation-states themselves. They cannot carry the burden of a military and economic independence. This means that the old doctrine of national sovereignty pushes them into misery or into new warlike complications."

"There are people who say that the future federation of Europe should come from the local agreements of the liberated small nations. This attitude is wrong. True federalism can only be the result of a strongly developed democratic spirit which is lacking in most of the countries in question," he said.

Intermediate Period Needed
"Furthermore, no new international order can be created without an intermediate period of consolidation and sanitation."

"All of the liberated countries of Central Europe must be put under the transitory surveillance of the United Nations," Dr. Jaszi said that for a transitional period the smaller nations should not be allowed to maintain independent armies but only contingents in the army of the United Nations.

"They must establish, under control of the United Nations, equal universal suffrage with secret ballot; they must settle frontier controversies on the basis of free plebiscites controlled by the United Nations, and guarantee a decent minimum of nationality rights to their minorities."

"The crushing of the dictators is not enough if the old order of distinct national sovereignties should be restored in Europe. Such an order, with or without the old type of League of Nations, would inevitably lead to a third world war."

'Casey at the Bat' Strikes Back For Health After Bad Illness

"Twas a close play, lads, but the Big Umpire has called the Mighty Casey safe on first. Since early in the month Daniel M. Casey, 60, the "Casey at the Bat" of the famous poem, has lain in the George Washington Hospital, critically ill and expected to strike out for the last time. Yesterday his physician, Dr. F. A. Reuter, revealed that the aged ball player has steadily gained strength in the last few days and on Saturday he was able to sit up for a while.

"With a man of his age," the doctor explained, "it is hard to say how long it will take for him to recover sufficiently to leave the hospital. He has his bad days and his good days, but he has shown a slow but steady improvement during the past week."

Fifty years ago Casey, a pitcher for the Phillies, went to bat against the New York Giants in the ninth inning with two men out and the bases full.

The count went 3 to 2 and Casey swung and missed.

And then a sports writer wrote the poem detailing the loss of the game to legendary Mudville which one of the greatest actors and declaimers of his day, De Wolfe Hopper, made famous.

War Fund Dinners To Hear Flier Who Escaped Gestapo

Helge Holt, Norwegian flier who escaped from the German Gestapo, will be among speakers at a Community War Fund pre-campaign rally dinner tonight at 8:30 at the Y. W. C. A.

Two hundred War Fund volunteer speakers will attend the meeting, at which Serge N. Benson, recently appointed chairman of the speakers' unit of the campaign, will preside.

Herbert L. Willett, Jr., executive director of the War Fund, will trace for the speakers the development of the community's united effort for welfare on both the home front and the fighting front, bringing them up to date with information about member agencies, details of budgets and the goal, and the task which is expected of the speakers.

The War Fund campaign motion picture, "Light Behind the Blackout," will have its first showing at the meeting.

Nurse Need Stressed by D. C. Pastors

Congregations Hear Clergy Plead For Women to Aid Growing Forces

The urgent need of nurses for military duty was laid before Protestant and Catholic congregations yesterday, Red Cross recruiting Sunday in the Nation's Capital.

Delegations of Red Cross First Reserve Nurses and uniformed Army and Navy nurses attended services at St. Matthew's and Washington Cathedral, and at the latter heard greetings from the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Episcopal Bishop of Washington.

The bishop commended American nurses for their role in the war. As the war continues, thousands more nurses must be called to duty, both on the firing line and on the home front, he said.

He read an announcement that 239 nurses from the District would be needed for overseas service by September 30. The letter also stressed the need of all inactive registered nurses returning to duty in local hospitals if they are ineligible for military duty.

Rev. C. W. Wood Named Rector Of St. Paul's

The Rev. Charles W. Wood, for more than three years assistant minister of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rock Creek Parish, has been elected rector by the vestry, it was announced at yesterday's services. The Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, has endorsed the election.

Mr. Wood will succeed the Rev. Dr. Franklin J. Bohannon, who presented his resignation in July effective September 1, because of a long illness. St. Paul's, Rock Creek Church Road and Webster Street Northwest, is the oldest Episcopal Church in the District.

Mr. Wood is a native of East Orange, N. J., and spent his early youth in Philadelphia, where he was graduated from Shaw Junior High School and the University of Pennsylvania, receiving the degree of B. S. C. from the former school in 1932. After three years in the business world he entered General Theological Seminary, New York City, and was ordained a deacon on June 5, 1939, by the Right Rev. Francis M. Tatit, S. T. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania.

He entered the Episcopal Church of the Atonement, president of the Diocesan Young People's Fellowship; national representative of the Episcopal Young People's Federation of the National Federation of Episcopal Young People, and was also active in Boy Scout and home missionary work.

Friend Wounded In Horseplay, Pistol Owner Shoots Self

An accidental pistol shot yesterday sent one Negro man to a hospital with a serious wound and, a few minutes later, prompted his close friend, police believe, to fire a bullet through his abdomen in remorse over the incident.

The controversy between the tenants and Greenway, Inc., headed by Morris Cafritz, centers about the latter's request for permission to raise rents in a number of his apartment units.

Cafritz states that the $39.50 charged for many of the units is too low to insure him a fair return and that they should be used to meet the rental value of other units in the development.

Tenants claim that Cafritz is charging $39.50 for some apartment units comparable to the $29.50 apartments, and that the higher rentals are in violation of the District Rent Control Act, fixing rents at the level of January 1, 1941.

Anti-Inflation Law Could Veto D. C. Gas-Rate Increase

Anti-inflation legislation which will be introduced in the Senate today will empower President Roosevelt to veto any rate increase which may be granted the Washington Gas Light Co. by the Public Utilities Commission, it was learned yesterday.

When Senator Barkley, majority leader, was asked if such power was provided in the pending bill, he replied that it was broad enough to cover any factor entering into the cost of living. His statement was made at an unusual Sunday conference of Democratic congressional leaders called to hasten the introduction of anti-inflation measures.

Maj. Second New Air Force Base Inspector

Assignment of Maj. Harry Second of 1801 Sixteenth Street Northwest as technical inspector of the new Army Air Force technical training school near Guilford, Miss., headlined yesterday's news of District men in the armed forces.

Major Second, 38, was Government inspector of airplanes and engines at Bolling Field from 1937 until last April. He was assistant technical inspector at MAJ. SECOND Keesler Field, Miss., before going to the new Guilford Field.

He first joined the Army in 1901 and was an enlisted man until World War I, when he attended officer-training school and was commissioned a second lieutenant.

Lieut. Leonard E. Cling, son of Mrs. Grace B. Cling, 230 Rhode Island Avenue Northeast, was graduated Saturday from the Army Air Force statistical school now being conducted by Harvard University's business school in Boston, Mass.

Four officers have completed a six weeks course in military instruction and physical conditioning at the Air Force Officer Training School in Miami Beach, Fla.

They are: Capt. Ralph A. Dunn, whose wife lives at Elgin Lane and 5451 Kirk Drive, Bethesda, Md.; Lieut. Martin L. Dellinger, of 3732 Alton Place Northwest; Lieut. Stanley E. True, former American Airlines employee whose wife lives at 311 Cumberland Avenue, Chevy Chase, Md.; and Lieut. Thomas G. Baptist, whose sister, Mrs. Agnes B. Lacy, lives at 4837 Windom Place Northwest.

Pvt. Thomas A. Robinson, of 1827 Belmont Road Northwest, has been graduated from the officers' candidate school at the anti-aircraft artillery division at Camp Davis, N. C., and is now a second lieutenant. In civil life, Lieutenant Robinson was an electrical engineer.

Francis D. Gray, 20, whose guardian is Mrs. Margaret M. Mulcahy, 11 West Bellflower Avenue, Alexandria, Va., has been promoted to sergeant at the Harlingen Army gunnery school in Harlingen, Tex., and unless he is held over to serve as an instructor, will depart tomorrow for the States.

Edward A. Fayman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Fayman, 1631 Euclid Street North-SERGEANT GRAY west, formerly employed in the circulation department of The Post, has received a commission as second lieutenant in the Signal Corps at the officer candidate school in Fort Monmouth, N. J.

A graduate of Central High School, Lieutenant Fayman enlisted in the Army in December, 1941, and entered officer candidate school in June.

Greenway Rent Hearings Resume Today

Hearings on the rent dispute at the Greenway housing development will resume this morning at 9:30 o'clock in the office of the rent administrator, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest.

The controversy between the tenants and Greenway, Inc., headed by Morris Cafritz, centers about the latter's request for permission to raise rents in a number of his apartment units.

Cafritz states that the $39.50 charged for many of the units is too low to insure him a fair return and that they should be used to meet the rental value of other units in the development.

Copperhead Killed By 3-Year-Old Boy

Martinsburg, W. Va., Sept. 13.—"It killed up and I hit it," was the laconic explanation given by Gary, three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Price, near here, yesterday when they found he had killed a large copperhead snake while at play near the home.

The snake crawled under the porch. He used a hatchet, with which he had been playing to kill it. The parents learned of the incident only when the tot called some older children to see what was left of the snake, which he had chopped to pieces.

Clergy Plans Spiritual Aid For Services

Needs of Many Strangers in City Are on Programs For Fall Season

Churches and Sunday Schools of the Nation's Capital stirred with activity yesterday, as many autumnal programs got under way.

A number of clergymen were welcomed home from vacations, and new faces were seen in several leadership capacities. And there was hustle and bustle as Sunday School and Bible classes got everything shipshape for a busy season ahead.

That churches are determined to use their full spiritual and material resources to meet the needs of Washington's influx of newcomers and men in uniform was much in evidence in plans for fall activity.

Commonwealth Presbyterian, led by Rev. James E. Freeman, Episcopal, led discussions on church work programs among war workers and service men, at the annual fall retreat of the Columbia Federation of Baptist Young People's Union. It was held at the Marjorie Webster School, 7775 Seventeenth Street Northwest.

Representatives of thirty local and nearby Baptist churches attended the rally, and early yesterday morning heard an address from Dr. Raymond J. Seegar, associate professor of physics at George Washington University, and a member of Reformation Lutheran Church.

The problem of the churches and service men and newcomers was much on the mind, too, of the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Sleeter as he, returned to his Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street northwest, after vacation and announced plans for the coming season as follows:

"Epiphany, being a downtown church and at a busy cross-roads of many types of life is trying to have her services arranged so that people in various walks of life can find a convenient hour for worship and instruction."

Metropolitan Baptist Church, Sixth and A Streets Northwest, yesterday launched its fall program by joining with Dr. Compton Ball in marking the beginning of his fortieth year as pastor there.

Among the clergy back in pulpits yesterday after vacations were the Rev. Paul W. Yinger, Cleveland Park Congregational Church; Dr. Seth R. Brooks, Universalist National Memorial Church; Dr. Thomas G. Baptist, now in his forty-second year as All Souls' Unitarian pastor; Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, Fourth Methodist Church; Dr. Edward H. Ruden, First Baptist Church; Rev. Edward O. Clark, Chevy Chase Baptist Church; Dr. Andrew R. Bird, Presbyterian Church of the Pilgrims; the Rev. Daniel W. Justice, Trinity Methodist, and others.

Young people of Ryland Methodist Church, Branch and Pennsylvania Avenues Southeast, sponsored a tea and reception yesterday afternoon—second day of the New Year's deacons. Miss Mary M. Fendehelm was greeted as new parish worker at Trinity Methodist Church, Fifth Street and Seward Square Southeast.

Godlessness Produced Nazis, Rabbi Asserts

"Nazism is the bitter fruit of the spiritual apostasy of the West," Rabbi Solomon H. Metz warned yesterday, as Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, 5703, was celebrated by world Jewry.

In synagogues throughout the city the ancient shofar (ram's horn) blasted its summons to repentance yesterday—second day of the New Year's observance—as Rosh Hashanah began on the Jewish Sabbath.

Rabbi Metz, preaching at Adas Israel Synagogue, Sixth and I Streets Northwest, contended that for nearly two centuries "intellectuals of all nations not exclusively 'Aryan' have been busy clearing the cultural highways of the world for the march of the Teutonic Black Plague."

"For generations," said Mr. Metz, "the know-all priests of philosophy, literature and research have been swinging the ax of skepticism, cynicism and downright atheism against the tree of Biblical faith and idealism."

"In the guise of alleged higher criticism, under the aegis of Darwinian evolution, the modernist, the Marxist dialectic, a sophisticated intelligentsia has worked untiringly to reduce the values of Biblical monotheism to ridicule and contempt."

Reminding his worshippers that "the shofar calls men to repentance," Rabbi Metz said "there can be no birth for humanity away from God and His law."

In the coming week the Jewish faithful will spiritually prepare themselves for their highest of events—Yom Kippur, Day of Atonement, starting at sundown next Sunday.

Treating Certain Kinds Of Low Blood Pressure

By Logan Clendenen, M. D.

Although I am frequently asked to say something about low-blood pressure, I have been compelled to refrain because there has been nothing to say. Lately, however, a simple treatment for certain forms of low blood pressure has been proved successful, so I will describe it today.

Blood pressure is measured by encircling the arm with a rubber bag attached to a mercury pressure column. When the arm band is inflated until the pressure just obliterates the pulse, the height of the mercury column measures the blood pressure.

Taking the pressures of many thousands of people, this has been found on the average to be 120 millimeters of mercury, recorded as 120. This is the systolic pressure, or the pressure in the arteries when the heart is contracting. The diastolic pressure—when the heart is relaxing—can also be measured, and is on the average 80; a diastolic pressure of 90 is high, and of 100, very high. The upper limit of a normal systolic pressure is considered to be 150.

Averages Are Arbitrary

These averages are, however, quite arbitrary. One out of every three persons over the age of 45 has a blood pressure of 150 or over. It is almost normal rather than a disease in that age period. Of the other 66 persons per 100 in that age period, about 25 have pressures from 120 to 140, about 30 have pressures from 110 to 120 and the rest are below 110.

The ideal blood pressure (not the average) is 110. This is the judgment of a physician who studied a large group of people, also inquiring into their activities. He concluded that at any age the ones who felt best were the most active, experienced the least fatigue and accomplished the best and the most work, and had a pressure around 110. At any rate 110 must not be considered "low" blood pressure.

Most of the people who have a lower blood pressure than that are unaware of it. It produces no symptoms. They live longer on the average. It is often associated with underweight, a thin linear "asthenic" type of body build with the drooping of the stomach and intestines, and such symptoms as the patient has can be as well ascribed to the general bodily inadequacy as to the incidental low blood pressure.

A special type of low blood pressure is postural—the person who has this is uncomfortable when he gets on his feet because in the erect position the blood pressure falls to very low levels. So he is likely to be dizzy and weak in the morning when he first gets up. In the course of the day this wears off and his blood pressure apparatus makes adjustments.

A good treatment for this condition has been developed by Drs. Maclean and Allen, at the Mayo Clinic. This is the "headup" bed. The head of the bed is elevated 18 inches (start with 6 inches) and the patient sleeps and rests in this position. The position prevents that loss of postural adaptation that the patient gained in the daytime. It is, in most cases, the only treatment needed.

Beauty

Mind Your Fingertips

By Betty Clarke

Whether it's algebra or first aid you're studying, you're judged by your appearance as well as by your learning. Hands especially tell a story. You wouldn't think of putting makeup on over a dirty face, so why try to cover up neglected nails with paint? You can't do it and have well-groomed hands.

Here are the basics necessary to an efficiency manicure; oily polish remover, oily cuticle remover, orangewood sticks, emery boards, a buffer, plus your pet shade of polish. The buffer may sound a bit old-fashioned, but it's a help toward a smooth-finished job.

Begin by removing the old polish; then soak your fingertips in warm, soapy water for a minute or two. Gently run the orangewood stick (dipped in cuticle remover) around the cuticle and underneath the tips. This step is easier if you push back your cuticle with a soft towel every time you wash your hands. You're less likely to have ragged edges or hangnails. In filing your nails to a moderate length and oval shape, don't file below the end of your finger at the sides of your nails. This prevents splitting nails. Before you apply the polish, buff your nails to a smoothness that only buffing can give them. Run your orangewood stick around the nail to clear the cuticle of polish before it sets. All in the interest of a neat job!

A carpenter-built frame with a closed shelf arrangement at the back and bookshelves at the sides is a good solution. This should be made so that the couch will slide in under the closed shelf at the back... that way the cushions will be brought forward to a position that makes them comfortable for sitting. The bookshelves serve as end tables and keep the cushions from slithering off at the sides.

Hints for the Housekeeper

Since moths are so tricky and can quickly cause much damage it is advisable to put moth balls or crystals between layers of folded blankets used occasionally. When needed, blankets can be hung in the air a short time to get rid of the moth-ball odor.

Baking soda will often remove stubborn grapefruit stains from linens. Moisten both sides of stain with vinegar and cover with soda. Let stand for five minutes, then rinse out in cold water and wash as usual.

When selecting paper for a dark room, choose paper with a light yellow, peach, beige, copper, pink or white background. The sunny room can have darker background of green, blue or gray.

To reduce shrinkage when laundering woolen hose, do not soak them. But wash out quickly, by gently squeezing in warm suds. Rinse in water of the same temperature. Carefully pull hose into shape and let dry on a towel. Never place hose to dry near artificial heat.

For best keeping qualities fill jars of pickles to overflowing. Then quickly adjust the lids. Store in cool, dark, dry place. To preserve the color of pickles it is often advisable to wrap each jar in paper, and tie in place with cord.

Animals In Decoration

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Don't snub that old tiger rug or the stuffed moose your husband brought home from his hunting trip. For animals are back in style for interior decoration and many smart rooms are designed with animals for their theme.

Not that it would be correct to say that animals ever really went "out." For the long view of man's achievements in ornament reveals the perennial appeal of animals in design. The earliest motifs on record use animals both decoratively and symbolically.

Even the faithful Mohammedans, who turned the abstract forbade the use of any living forms in ornament, often got around this restriction. They just had the fabrics with this type of design woven by Christian slaves... for the Moslem rule prohibited making pictorial representations of living forms but said nothing about using them. Thus the true believers felt that the curse of Allah fell on the nonbelievers and that was all right with them.

In many lands various animals in ornamental design had symbolic meaning or denoted special rank. Even today the lion signifies Britain, the bear stands for Russia, the eagle for our own country. And our two political parties have also adopted animals as their emblems. Think too of all the lovely bird designs in Chintzes and china, the horse and hound designs in cretonnes and wall paper, the zebra printed linens and the pastoral animals in favorite toile de Jouy patterns.

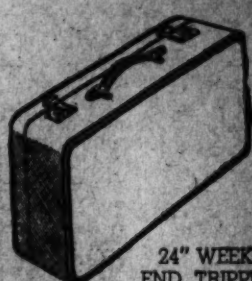

Rub Rough Iron With Damp Salt

A pressing iron sometimes gets a little rough on the bottom. To make it smooth rub vigorously with salt dampened in cold water applied with crushed newspaper. Rub on a clean cloth and the iron will be improved.

Be sure to use careful measurements when making coffee. Because of coffee shortage, not a grain should be wasted. Make up just enough for the family use. Leftovers, however, can be put in gelatin and creamy desserts and sauces. Two level tablespoons (measure accurately) of coffee for each 8-ounce measuring cup of water is the average measurement.

PERIODIC FEMALE WEAKNESS

And Want To Build Up Red Blood!

O.K. TOJO...
you asked for it!

You dished it out, with a head start by treachery—now we're going to see how you can take it!

We're ganging up on you, Tojo, in a way you and your Nazi friends don't understand.

Spreading like wildfire from coast to coast and from Canada to Mexico is our Payroll Savings Plan—get that, Tojo? Not confiscation—savings.

By the tens of millions, workers and employees of plants in every state of our country are cooperating with their unions and with management.

Of their own free will they're agreeing to put ten percent—a dime from every dollar—of their earnings in United States WAR BONDS.

Every payday the plant management sets aside this ten percent, then, each time it adds up to $18.75, the worker gets his Bond.

See, Tojo? Hundreds of millions of good U. S. dollars are going into the planes, the tanks, the guns and the ships to blast you right out of your sandals!

And we're paying for it... the workers and employers... the farmers, doctors, lawyers... all of us of our own free will, lending it, from our pay.

And—because this is the American way of doing things—we're building our own financial security, too, against the day when the war will be over—when we've shown you what decent, clean, free people can do.

Every year those War Bonds of ours increase in value, Tojo, until, after ten years, Uncle Sam hands us back TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS for every $18.75 we invested in buying you.

Get it, Tojo? It isn't the Jap way, the Nazi way, nor the Fascist way.

It's the free American way!

So, when you see those clouds of planes over your troops, your ships and your factories—when the tanks come at you spitting lead—and our good American boys get you on the run—remember, we're paying for it—Smith, and Harrigan, and Cohen, and Godowsky, and Leblanc, and Hawick, Americans all, in a free country.

So take it, Tojo—you asked for it!

5 Reasons Why

1. By investing in War Bonds you help provide the planes, the tanks, the guns and the ships we must have to survive and conquer.

2. You prove that you are a patriotic American.

3. You aid the morale of our fighting men, by showing them that the entire Nation is behind them.

4. You prove to our enemies that we are a United People.

5. You protect your own financial future, as every $18.75 you invest in a War Bond brings you back $25 in 10 years. You make the world's safest investment, by buying a share in the world's most powerful country.

BRAID

Black and lustrous on a crimson wool jacket. 1942 Victorian charm expressed in a costume by Nettie Rosenstien. Despite its military origin, braid, as applied here has a fin de siècle femininity much more reminiscent of Anna Karenina than of her captain. The skirt is black, graceful and kind to the hips. This suit is a perfect weight for early fall and will be wonderful later under black persian.

Vinegar Rinse for Lustrous Hair
Advised, but Should Be Diluted

If you've ever washed your hair (and who hasn't for goodness sake?) you know the routine of the vinegar rinse. But there is more to it, says Actress Simone Simon, than merely pouring vinegar on your wet head. Your locks, the actress, can't take their vinegar straight without becoming dry and brittle.

Simone uses one part vinegar (usually about one-fourth of a cupful) to three parts of warm water, pours this over her hair, then rinses it all again thoroughly. Surprising how much soap comes out after this vinegar rinse, even when you'd thought you had rinsed your hair thoroughly.

Good-by,
Gadgets—
Hello,
Heirlooms!

Are you studying to be an ancestor? Then run, do not walk, to the nearest shop and get a load of the big news in costume jewelry—heirlooms instead of gadgets.

Wartime metal shortages have caused a highly gratifying revolution in the budget jewelry field. Since manufacturers are unable to get any more of the brass, chromium and base metal with which we once loaded our groaning lapels, the new costume jewelry is mostly sterling silver, sometimes with a gold or platinum plate, in dainty, old-fashioned designs that might have come from your grandmother's jewel box.

Remember the gold brooches and earrings that were fashionable when mother was a girl? Remember the pearl dog collars and the sentimental hearts and flowers, clasped hands and doves that formed the jewelry motif of the day? They're all with us again, charming and nostalgic, ready to add to your own personal heirloom supply.

Because these new brooches and clips, earrings and bracelets are made of silver and gold instead of base metal, they are of necessity smaller and daintier than the "hunk" jewelry of pre-war days.

The current tendency, as interpreted by Clifford Furst, costume jewelry designer, is away from lapel ornaments and toward small brooches worn at the center of collar or neckline, with the utilitarian purpose of fastening the dress or blouse.

There also is a note of pageantry in the new collections, with coats of arms done in intaglio, delicately wrought national symbols such as the French fleur de lis and the British griffin, and various versions of the fast-vanishing royal crown.

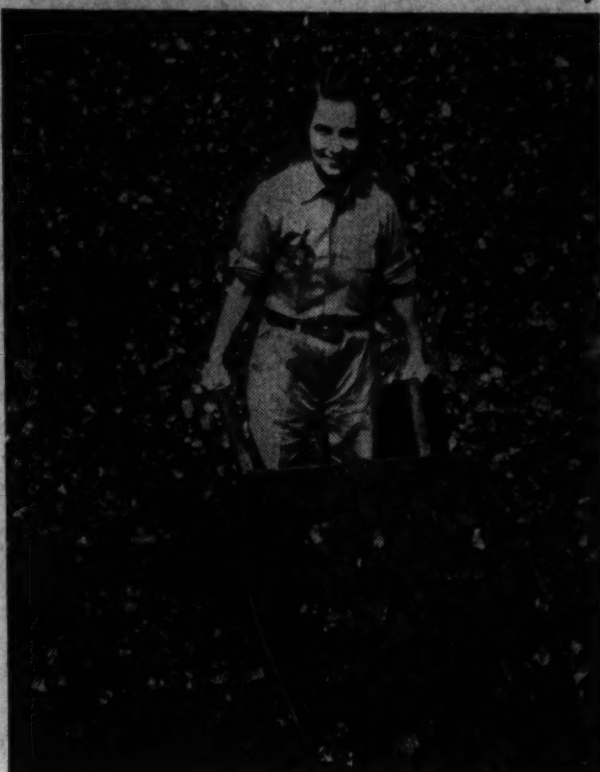

Ceiling Stuff

Before you get all riled up and accuse your grocer of violating the price control regulations, find out the reason for the change in price of whatever you are buying. He may have been selling the item below his legal ceiling when you last bought it. Maybe he was overstocked on that item; maybe he wanted to attract new customers; maybe he was just being generous. Whatever his reason, it was perfectly legitimate for him to sell below his ceiling price. If the grocer feels he no longer wishes to sell at less than the ceiling, he can raise his price to the highest price for which the item sold in March, 1942.

Fine Feathers

Woman Runs Coal Business the Hard Way

Detroit, Mich.—For a woman to run her own coal business is in itself a unique feminine occupation; but when she actually shovels coal and does the work of a man in the yards, that added activity marks her as an extraordinary personage. Such is the case of Miss Gladys Earl, above, the sole owner and operator of the People's Coal and Coke Co. here. Her trademark, "Miss Earl Your Coal Girl," tends to remind her prospective customers that her business is run by a woman.

Before she started in the coal business in 1929 Miss Earl was a buyer of women's sports apparel. She first earned $6 a week and a few years later formed a partnership in her present business, later becoming the sole owner after her partner was drafted. She does her own work in the coal yard out of necessity because her male help keeps getting drafted. People who visit her place of business are amazed at the amount of physical labor she does.

On small loads where the coal is not refined (i. e. the dust is not separated from the larger pieces) Miss Gladys Earl shovels it into the truck ready to be delivered direct to the customer.

Navy Nurse Captured at Guam
Tells of Imprisonment

Being a prisoner of the Japs was no fun—they all admit that. But to one of the Navy nurses, Leona Jackson, who returned aboard the Gripsholm after service in Guam, the cruellest blow of all was dealt when she hit New York City. With visions of high crowned hats, peg tops and sheer stockings, swimming before her eyes, she headed for the nearest clothes shop only to learn en route from a chief nurse that they had been ordered into uniform for "the duration."

Leona's description of being taken prisoner in Guam is restrained and tells no horror story. But she does admit that New York "looked mighty good" and she is looking forward to a peek at her home town, near Dayton, Ohio, which she is sure will "look even better."

At present, with the other nurses, she is at the Navy Medical Center in Bethesda, awaiting further orders. On unfortified Guam they were bombed consistently for two days by the Japanese, "and during that time we did a lot of thinking about those long arguments in Congress of whether or not to fortify the island," she said with a grim chuckle. The early part of January they were taken to Japan. Asked what her impressions of that country were, she said, "Well, it was just a personally conducted tour with a Japanese guard all the way, so I didn't get what you might term 'impressions.'"

Their first stop was at Ventsuji prison camp, where almost all the military prisoners from Guam were interned. They remained there until March, when they (the nurses) were moved to Kobe, to a detention house. The treatment was about what you would expect, she said: the quarters awful and the food worse. Miss Jackson lost 15 pounds, but feels quite lucky that that is all she did lose.

Asked how she occupied herself during most of the day, the nurse smiled and said: "Our mending took a good bit of our time—and increased daily." She arrived in Guam late in January, and until the Japs moved in was enjoying her tour of duty in the tropics.

"Well, I am an ensign now," she said in answer to a question about rank. But that ensign title is a bit new and she still is not quite sure how to use it. After her trip home to Ohio, Ensign Jackson expects to return to Washington for duty.

In the Capital Spotlight

Col. Herbert Hayden
Of Service Family
On Duty Here

By Patricia Grady

With eight in his immediate family having graduated from one of the two service academies, it was inevitable that Lieut. Col. Herbert Bainbridge Hayden should be the ninth. His alma mater is West Point, by way of the White House and China—but that's another story.

On duty with the War Department as an ordnance officer, Colonel Hayden went back to soldiering five months ago, after having been released from the Army because of injuries sustained during the last war. Before donning a uniform—on which glitter two long rows of World War I medals—Colonel Hayden served a stint in the War Production Board.

Not new to Washington, this dynamic officer attended Western High School here while his father, Rear Admiral Edward E. Hayden, held the post of Superintendent of the Naval Observatory. Though he escapes being a native Washingtonian—Old Point, Va., is his natal place—Colonel Hayden makes up in enthusiasm for the Capital city this oversight of birth.

He Wears Croix de Guerre

Asked to explain his medals, the colonel deprecates his having merited them. "Things always seem to be happening where I am," he observes as he denies knowing for what valiant deed he was awarded the French Croix de Guerre.

But about that appointment to West Point. "I just went there by proxy for my brother," he observes.

It seems that his brother—now Capt. Reynolds Hayden, U. S. N., who was in charge of the Navy's medical set-up at Pearl Harbor—smuggled himself into China during his teens and played a hero's role in the Boxer Rebellion. For his deeds, President Theodore Roosevelt offered him an appointment to the Military Academy. But Brother Reynolds had other ideas. He wanted to be a Navy doctor. So the President then offered the appointment to a member of his family. "Young Herbert will go," his father told the President. And so young Herbert did.

HARRIS & EVANS
COLONEL HAYDEN

Hardly out of West Point, the energetic young officer felt that if he was to be a General Staff officer he should have a working knowledge of all of the corps. So in a few years he had served in six corps... had taken a veterinarian's course and horse-shoeing course so he could better understand his duties in the Field Artillery... had taken an enlisted man's course in cooking and baking as a Quartermaster officer... had served in the Philippines.

When the United States entered World War I, Herbert Hayden was a major. In a conversation

Baking, Polo, Farming Are Among His Career Sidelights

with the then Chief of Staff, he suggested that he be sent overseas in command of a particular job as a lieutenant colonel. Three days later he had silver leaves on his shoulders and was at that time one of the youngest such officers in the service. He was 28.

Lieutenant Colonel At 28

While garnering his medals in France, the colonel "got a bit shot up," and retired from the Army. Back in the United States after his recovery, he went into business in New York, married Ethel Wells of Long Island after she discovered he could cook, and indulged in his interrupted hobby of polo—during his early Army career he had been an 8-goal man on a number of Army teams.

One of the accomplishments of which he is proudest is his bread-making ability. "Got so I could knead a loaf with each hand," he unblushingly admits.

New England Farmer

Though he has a home in Georgetown, Colonel Hayden considers that his real home is his farm in Maine where his wife and young son are now living. They will join him in the Capital this week for the winter.

"It's self-sustaining," says Colonel Hayden of his New England farm as he extolls the virtues of his home-grown vegetables, straight-from-the-cow milk and Hayden-raised livestock. And then of course there are his horses.

Medals notwithstanding, the tribute with which Colonel Hayden is quietly most delighted is the inscription on the back of the gold watch he carries given him by his men when he was a lieutenant. "In appreciation of a loyal friend, a square man, an efficient officer—in every way a thoroughbred."

City of the Future

Impressions of Washington as Set Down
By a Costa Rican Visitor Here

(The following article was written by Senora Amalia de Sotela of San Juan, Costa Rica, wife of the dean of the University of Costa Rica, Dr. Rogelio Sotela Bonilla. With her husband, who was invited here by the State Department, she made a tour of several of our universities.)

There are the cherry blossoms, the dark trunks of the trees; there are running waters: it is the Potomac shining in the afternoon sun. The sun is still high in the sky; we have passed to the other side of the bridges and the parks of the Potomac extend still farther beyond. In one of the flowery pavilions we are offered tea; we are spending the afternoon with Letitia and Luis Fernandez, the latter our excellent Minister in Washington.

The airplanes fly noisily very near us... I turn around to watch them, as they land at the airport, whose windows are shining in the sun. The cherry trees have carpeted the ground with petals. The afternoon declines and we stop for a minute to watch the boats; the breeze moves the flowers on Letitia's dress and the veil on my hat as though saying goodbye... We get in the car which is parked on the grass nearby.

We leave the Potomac and the auto speeds up Massachusetts Avenue, skirting Dupont Circle... The familiar silhouette of the majestic Capitol dome is now in back of us, becoming indistinguishable among a sea of marble buildings and enveloped in a faint cloud; we have passed the Red Cross Headquarters, the building of the D. A. R., and the Pan American Union; also the grandiose and powerful Lincoln Monument, whose white silhouette is reflected in the waters of the pool.

In the interior of the gigantic nave the statue of the great emancipator seems to recall to us his Gettysburg address, making us feel that all men are brothers, that "all are born equal."

The architecture of Washington reminds us of the classic Hellenic style; Doric columns of the Parthenon in the Lincoln Monument; Corinthian columns in the Supreme Court Building; and the pure Ionic style of classic volutes in the White House, where is molded the future of the world, because the greatest and most enlightened man of his time prepares the happy future of the new race from his desk in the White House.

Washington, where the future of the world is being planned, Washington, with its Mellon Gallery where is kept the treasury of the canvasses of Pablo Verones, will give the cry of hope for the world! My husband had been invited by the Department of State to give a series of lectures on Spanish-American literature; lectures which have been very successful in the different centers of learning. I accompanied him and enjoy with him his glory and the homage which is paid to him. Visits to the different universities are the original part of the program and it is a great privilege when, each morning, we are received in a new university. It is the educator of a Latin country, it is the messenger of culture, who is received with cordial admiration.

Crossing broad corridors and gardens where groups of students stroll beneath the trees, there is explained to us with great care the complete organization, the new systems, the new studies. My husband speaks in Castilian and this awakens a great interest, because of a desire which is being awakened—with great force—of coming closer to the Latin spirit, which will be that which speaks for the new race.

Washington with its universities, its many libraries and gardens, is now the city of the future from which will come hope for the world.

H. T. Smyths On Northern Bridal Tour

Upon their return from a northern wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Thomas Smyth will make their home at Wakefield Hall. Mrs. Smyth is the former Miss Mary Elizabeth Robey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ashby Robey and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Augustine Smyth of Jamaica, Long Island, New York.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas G. Smyth officiated at the nuptial mass, which united the couple in marriage on Saturday in the Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white duchess satin, trimmed with a ruffle of rose point lace. Her train length veil of illusion fell from a coronet of seed pearls and she carried a bouquet of roses, orchids and stephanotis.

Miss Patricia McDonough acted as maid of honor and bridesmaids were Miss Mary Smyth and Miss Marie Sauter. They all wore period gowns of faille silk and carried garden bouquets. George Lutz was the best man and ushering were Ensign Frank A. Robey, Ensign Levin P. Jandy Jr., Robert H. Sauter and Louis Albro. Following the wedding a reception was held at the Hotel 2400.

The bride is a graduate of the Academy of the Holy Cross and Mr. Smyth attended New York University.

Miss Potts Is Bride of Lieut. Correll

The Takoma Park Presbyterian Church was the scene of the wedding late yesterday afternoon of Miss Glenna Irene Potts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Chester Potts of Takoma Park, and Lieut. Melvin W. Correll, U. S. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Correll of Benton Harbor, Mich. The Rev. R. Paul Schearrer officiated at the 6:30 o'clock ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an ivory brocade gown fashioned with a long, circular train, a sweetheart neckline and a basque bodice. She wore her mother's veil of illusion and Brussels lace which fell from a lace coronet. Her shower bouquet was of white roses and gladioli.

The maid of honor, Miss Marcia Nelson, wore a princess style dress of gold faille and carried an arm bouquet of russet daisy chrysanthemums. The bridesmaids, Miss Gertrude Jean Potts, a sister of the bride, and Miss Betsy Ross, were gowned like the honor attendant in russet and green, respectively. Their bouquets were of yellow daisy chrysanthemums. Edward Sewell of Baltimore served as best man and the ushers were Chester Potts, a brother of the bride, and Robert Hixon.

Following the ceremony, a reception for over a hundred guests was held in the Takoma Park home of the bride's parents. After the reception the newly weds left on a brief wedding trip before Lieut. Correll has to report for duty at Fort Sill, Okla.

Matron in Chief
Sees 'Sights'
During Visit

Arriving in town yesterday, Matron in chief of the Royal Canadian Army, Elizabeth L. Smellie was whisked from Union Station to various points of interest in the Capital.

Yesterday afternoon she was feted at a tea given by Col. Julia Flikke, head of the Army Nurses Corps. On Tuesday, Miss Alma Haupt will be host at a dinner party for the distinguished Canadian visitor.

Matron in chief Smellie has the relative rank of lieutenant colonel but in the Canadian army the nurses are called sisters and head nurses, matrons. Born within a few miles of the United States, the Canadian is familiar with this country having graduated from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Since war was declared Matron in chief Smellie has been "borrowed" by or from several organizations. In peacetime she was director of the Victorian Order of Nurses in Canada and was borrowed from them for the duration by the army. Not many months ago she was "borrowed" by the Canadian counterpart of the WAACS to help organize that group of women.

Miss Harmon In London

Leaving over the weekend, Miss Dudley Harmon flew by clipper to Great Britain, where she will work in London with the War Shipping Administration.

LADIES' DAY—

Women Find Work to Do
In Factories and Out

The ladies are certainly coming into their own these days. "From all over the world it comes, stories of women releasing men for fighting jobs by entering fields hitherto thought to be strictly masculine domains. And, on the basis of the trend, this is only the beginning."

From Oakland, Calif., comes the news that the first women bus drivers in the United States will take over the controls this morning in that Bay Area city. Sixteen women, who have been in training during the past three weeks, will report for work this morning in their uniforms which have been patterned after the current Red Cross ensembles. The lady drivers will wear skirts, not slacks.

These bus drivers, feminine version, will draw the same pay as their male counterparts and will drive on the regular runs. About a month ago, this same transit system hired about twenty women to act as "street loaders," collecting fares and making change at heavy loading points. The company is planning to hire additional women both as drivers and shop employees in the near future. And that southern California metropolis, Los Angeles, will follow Oakland's example very soon, with a group of women streetcar conductors already undergoing training.

Then comes word from the A. F. of L. that its bollermaker union would accept women for membership. This comes in answer to the urgent need for workers in the huge shipbuilding program. From Alberta, Canada, the news arrives that the weaker sex has gone into this labor thing really seriously. Ten women are working shoveling gravel and moving lumber at the new hangars being built for a repair depot at Currie Barracks. The foreman reports that the women are proving capable on their first job and that more will probably be hired as male workers become increasingly difficult to find.

The aircraft factories were, of course, the first to enter the women-laborer field and the Department of Labor reports that an estimated 250,000 women will be at work in that industry by the end of the year. Last year about 2000 women were in similar factories. Most women are working a 48-hour week on the day shift at wages commensurate to those received by men.

So, get your muscles and your reflexes in trim, ladies. You've work to do.

THREE MEALS A DAY

By Marguerite Wright

If Old Mother Hubbard had been a Government clerk in Washington she wouldn't have been even faintly surprised to have found that her cupboard held only a bone.

In fact, she wouldn't have been surprised to know that the cupboards of most of her friends, her boarding house keeper, and even grocer were in the same sad state of affairs.

For, to most Government girls who have come straight to Washington from their homes where dining was simply a matter of sitting down to the family table and starting in, eating is becoming quite a problem.

This problem is probably the simplest for the girl who lives in a boarding house. She has only to take it or leave it. She's paying for it, the rates are more or less standardized, and if she doesn't like it she can always run down to the corner delicatessen after supper for an apple to soothe an empty stomach.

Always the Same

Boarding house food is usually much the same. Either you get used to it and learn to live quite well on it—or you don't get used to it and either get pale and thin or move elsewhere in the search for food. But whatever you decide to do, you might as well do it silently, since complaints have resulted in few reforms since the day, ages past, when someone decided to capitalize on the human appetite.

Of course, there are some good boarding houses. And if you live in one of the places where food tastes like food and not like something pulled from the insides of an old straw mattress you should burn incense before your cook's door nightly.

But no matter how many times you are driven to eating in restaurants by poor meals or tiny servings, your board and room still probably costs you from $45 to $50 a month. Of course your lunches are not included in this total and will add another $10 a month if you keep the cost at 35 cents a day, probably an average for most girls.

But, if you're getting by with $40 a month (that's more than half of your salary) for room and board, you are not doing badly in comparison to many others who live in Washington.

Cooking at Home

Of course, you can eat better and probably at a little less cost if you are one of the lucky ones who have been fortunate in their search for apartments. If you're cooking at home you have your problems, too, but one of these won't be putting up with food you simply can't stand just because it's inexpensive.

Probably your greatest problem is that of shopping. If you live in the suburbs where stores remain open until 8 or 9 o'clock, that problem is more simple than if you live in a district where stores close their doors at 6 or 6:30 o'clock. If that is the case, and you are one of the clerks who leave their desks at 5 o'clock or after, you find the last hour of your day downtown filled with scurrying attempt to remember what your kitchen shelves are bare of and with hurried dashes into the nearest grocery for a couple of tomatoes, a half-pound of hamburger, and a can of coffee.

Of course, since this is war, you probably won't be able to find the hamburger (or very much meat of any kind) so you'll grab a can of sardines. And you'll take the only kind of coffee available, then spend the next dozen mornings holding your nose while you pour it down, because the chances are that the stores of your favorite brand are running low.

You'll find that even eating at home is considerably more expensive than it was a year ago, for, although the prices of staple groceries are being held in check by price ceilings, the fresh fruits and vegetables which make up a large part of your diet have definitely not heard that the cost of living is supposed to be stabilized.

Kitchen Economy

But, in spite of rising prices, if you are able to do a good job of shopping and if you know anything about kitchen economy, you will probably be able to eat for slightly more than a dollar a day. This is particularly true if you are one of the hundreds who pack a sandwich, a deviled egg and a piece of last night's cake into a bundle for your lunch. Your budget for room and board will probably be slightly less than that of the girl who lives in a boarding house.

But consider the case of the clerk who has been stymied in her search for an apartment and who can't face the thought of taking her two squares a day in a boarding house. She has probably the most severe eating problems. She must daily solve the question of where and what she will eat. And sometimes she wonders why she bothers, for Washington has never claimed to be a heaven for connoisseurs, and any such reputation it might have merited in the past has faded since it has become a boom town.

We have a great deal of sympathy here for the girl who is ready to give to the people who cook and serve our food. We've heard all about shortages, both of food and of help, and we know almost all there is to know about rising prices. We'll gladly say that we're very sorry about the whole thing. But when we find ourselves paying double prices out of our ultra-thin purses for food that is badly cooked, badly served and of an inferior quality, our sympathy begins to waver and we stand on the verge of wondering whether we are not being ripped off. We even wonder sometimes whether the tale of shortages is not becoming an alibi for cutting down on services in order to pocket extra profit.

We stand in danger of becoming a part of the group of "ill housed, ill clothed and ill fed," although most of us are making what has generally been conceded to be a fair wage.

Most of us have less than $100 a month to live on after retirement fund, war bonds and income taxes are paid. From that $100 we must eat and sleep, clothe ourselves, pay our laundry and cleaning bills. Our insurance payments, doctor bills, entertainment and various and sundry other items must be squeezed from the remainder of our check. And a greater number of us than would be believed from a casual inspection are sending money home for some reason or other.

We cannot afford to pay $1.50 a day for food. And unless we eat less than our appetites or our health demands, it is almost impossible to eat for less in downtown Washington. A recent check-up of restaurants revealed several places which have deserted completely the old method of dinner menus and patrons are now ordering a la carte, the most expensive way of buying a meal. Other restaurants showed a jump of from 15 to 30 per cent in prices within a few months. Meals once listed at 55 to 65 and 70 cents now are priced from 85 cents to $1.25, a price clear out of sight of the Government's price ceiling.

Government-sponsored restaurants have been timidly suggested as one answer to the problem. The prospect is a drastic one. However, unless price ceilings become far more efficient in keeping our cost of living down, we Government girls are going to be waiting hungrily for the doors of the first to open.

If I were going to college this fall—

I wouldn't be too hearbroken if my trunk didn't contain all the smart sweaters, stunning little wools, date dresses, prom frocks, football togs, lounging pajamas, etc., that Maggie Ritz has in her college trousseau. I would try to remember that a lot of girls in England, France, Russia and elsewhere, to say nothing of the United States, were wearing left-overs and made-overs proudly and gallantly. Also, I would realize that there wouldn't be nearly as many proms, dormitory teas, weekend jaunts, fudge parties, dates and dress-up occasions as formerly; and I would concentrate for a change on the clothes I intended to wear in the classroom doing the thing I really came to college to do. And finally, I would consider the fact that chemistry, to say nothing of priorities, was likely to make great changes in the attire of the future, and that I couldn't afford to be caught in the world of tomorrow with too many of yesterday's old clothes.

If I were going to college this September—

I would face the fact that personality styles were changing for women everywhere and that the "too, cute" little freshman, or sophomore, or junior, or senior, was becoming passe. While I would cherish my buoyancy, my laughter, my gaiety, which are youth's most precious gifts to a grim and saddened world, I would realize that when boys of 18 and 19, and even younger, were facing death on battlefields throughout the world, it was time for girls of the same age at home to grow up. I would also recall that in the preservation and building of this Nation, girls no older than the freshmen of today bore a woman's and often a mother's part. Last, I would bear in mind that for a good many years to come, there won't be time or place in the world for "cutes," or "smarties," or "babes," or "dolls," or "chicks," or other types of infantile feminine personality.

The Gentler Sex

If I had the chance to go to college this year—

I would get on to the fact that the days of going to college for fun, or prestige, or contacts were definitely over; that a new social order was in the making, and that in this every girl was likely to be on her own, not reinforced by papa's money or mama's social position. I would also consider the fact that even a "good marriage" was not the most dependable form of security, and also that parasites of any kind were likely to be fifth wheels in the future scheme of things. So . . . I would begin to find out what constructive things in the world's work I was best fitted by nature to do and interest to do, and direct my studies toward that end. And because the world we face is likely to be a rigorous one, I would, above all, treasure my health, and, like the soldiers and sailors, build up my physical strength and toughen my body for whatever battle I might face.

If I had the wartime privilege of going to college—I would recognize that upon my generation rested the job of building a new world. I would also recognize that as a woman I would have a bigger say in this job than women of the past have ever had in government. Accordingly, I would choose at least one course that would help me to know better my country and what it represented in the world. I would try to find a teacher who could make America's history, or government, or culture more than a table of dates and facts, and who could help me discover what all this talk of democracy really was about. I would try through some study of social sciences to prepare myself to have an effective voice in settling the political, economic, and social problems that are going to bedevil my generation for years to come. Also realizing that in the future I was destined to function as a citizen of the world as well as of the United States, I would fit myself for that double obligation.

If I were going to college in 1942—

I would go thoughtfully, realizing that my going probably meant more sacrifice by my parents than ever before, that it was another drain on a Nation's already overstrained resources, and that it was an investment by society in my future usefulness to the world. I would also realize that it was an expression of that freedom of mind, thought and speech now denied to the young people of Germany, Italy, Japan, and all the conquered peoples of Europe—that same freedom that many of the boys with whom I have danced lightly and merrily soon be offering their lives to defend. And so I would try to go as the men I know go into service, debonair on the surface, full of the lusty spirits of youth, having my fun and my furrows of gravity, but fully aware of the serious business at hand, and working and sweating and training to make myself fit for the stupendous job ahead.

"I would realize that when boys of 18, 19, were facing death on battlefields throughout the world, it was time for girls of the same age at home to grow up . . ."

The 1942 Apple-Pie Version Is a New Culinary Excursion

Apple pie has always been a great American favorite. We are told that it was George Washington who first set a stamp of approval on this dessert.

And though sugar bowls are being rationed in this year's apple pie season, the parade of juicy apple pies will go on. For this luscious fruit can be sweetened with sugar substitutes very satisfactorily.

Today's recipe for Apple Pie, 1942, is a refrigerator dessert sweetened with honey. The corn-flake crust is made simply by rolling the crisp corn flakes to fine crumbs, adding melted butter and a very small amount of sugar. The mixture is then pressed firmly into the sides and bottom of a pie pan and the pie shell is baked for 8 to 10 minutes, or chilled thoroughly without baking. After the shell has cooled, the filling of apple sauce, honey and whipped cream is added and the pie is chilled until ready to serve.

Besides its ambrosial flavor and the ease with which it can be prepared, this dessert has exceptionally high food value. For one of the ready-to-eat cereal manufacturers announces that his entire line of products—including corn flakes—either are whole grain or are restored to whole-grain nutritive values of thiamin (Vitamin B1), niacin and iron. Thus the corn flakes used in making the crust boast whole-grain nutritive values. Here is a pie crust that is digestible and packed full of essential nutrients.

The restoration of the corn flakes to whole-grain nutritive values is news of national importance. For it means that millions of corn-flake breakfasters start the day fortified with a good supply of these food elements so necessary for their best health and efficiency. Following is the recipe for the 1942 apple pie:

Apple Pie, 1942—Roll 4 cups corn flakes into fine crumbs. Melt 1-3 cup butter in pie pan; add ¼ cup sugar and crumbs and mix thoroughly. (Reserve 2 tablespoons crumb mixture for topping.) Press evenly and firmly around sides and bottom of pie pan. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about 8 or 10 minutes. Cool before adding filling. If desired, pie shell may be thoroughly chilled without baking.

Soak 1 tablespoon gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Dissolve in 2 cups hot apple sauce. Add ¼ cup strained honey. Chill until mixture begins to congeal. Whip with rotary beater. Fold in ½ cup whipping cream (whipped) and add ½ teaspoon ground cinnamon if desired. Pour into baked or well-chilled pie shell. Top with sprinkling of corn-flake mixture. Chill until stiff enough to cut. Yield: One 8 or 10 inch pie.

Getting Flour Spread Evenly On Frying Chicken

Molly, of Fibber McGee and Molly fame, knows what's cooking—and how to cook it. Specialty of the Jordan household (the name in private life is Jordan; they save the McGee for radio and pictures is fried chicken). And Molly knows a time-saver. Most cooks prepare chicken for frying by laboriously rolling each piece in flour, invariably getting it on unevenly. Molly pours a little flour in a paper sack, adds two or three pieces of chicken, closes the bag, and shakes with a right good will. Presto—flour on evenly and quickly with no waste.

Schoolgirl's Embarrassment About Bow Legs Reminds Young Wife How She Suffered on That Score 10 Years Ago; Now Says, 'Who Cares?'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In your column of Sunday, September 6, you discussed the problem of a high school girl, who is so ashamed of her bow legs that she can't enjoy life. She signed herself "M. A. C." Her letter was impressive, because I might have written it myself, 10 years ago—when my maiden initials were the same as hers. My chief regret, on reading it, was that your daily column was not a part of my life at that time. I wish that I might have had such wise counsel for the asking. I remember that Dorothy Dix's so-called advice was being published at that time, accompanied by the picture of an aging doll with a sour face. But even at 16, her counsel impressed me as never hitting the crux of the problems offered.

As you told "M. A. C." first off, her slightly bowed legs are not her real affliction. Her greatest social handicap (as you say) is obsessive self-concern—a Narcissistic, self-absorbed state of mind fairly characteristic of the teen age. What the self-conscious youngster that age fails to realize is that the majority of people are so preoccupied with their own problems that they don't give a darn about other people's legs. And so few women have perfectly shaped legs, anyway, that unless a girl's gams are so bowed that she couldn't "stop a pig in an alley," nobody gives them a second thought.

One of the most popular girls in our crowd, who never missed a school dance with one of our football heroes, was a beautiful girl with legs so crippled by infantile paralysis that she could barely walk. She attended all the dances, yet never danced. Surely "M. A. C." is not so handicapped. She might have something to complain about, if she were. But the persons with real problems usually solve them. It is our imaginary problems that "get us down."

I can look back now, with 10 years' perspective to clarify my thinking and calmly review my wretched reactions (at 16) to my bow legs. "M. A. C.'s" recital of symptoms tells the story. I was so embarrassed by my imaginary affliction that my high school friendships were adversely affected. However, I didn't carry things so far as to retire from society, as "M. A. C." inclines to do. On the contrary, I worked out such an intricate and subtle pattern of behavior for camouflaging my bow legs that I really think I could qualify as a camouflage expert with the fighting forces!

For instance, I never approached a young man directly. (Women's opinion of my legs didn't matter!) It seems laughable now,—but if I were coming down a long, empty school corridor to meet a boy who was waiting for me at the other end, I would half turn at intervals and make sidelong progress, pretending I was looking for someone behind me! This was to draw the waiting swain's attention from my unattractive legs. Then, as I neared him, I would turn, smile radiantly and catch his eye,—thus fixing it on my face, so as to keep it away from my silhouette. On the way home from school, I would practice walking a straight line,—putting one foot directly in front of the other, I had read somewhere that this was not only the most graceful way of walking, but also made bow legs less apparent. As I recall, this was no easy feat; and may have looked funnier,—as I did it,—than my bow legs.

Like "M. A. C." I wore short socks for quite a spell, thinking this would fool the beholder's eye. But when I joined a sorority, this garb was considered childish, so I gave it up. As you suggest, and as I learned then, well-cut pumps and sheer hose in neutral shades bronze are far more flattering to the leg than short socks and sports oxfords. A medium-slender heel on my shoes seemed to throw the calf muscles into more graceful alignment. Also, attractively shod feet call attention away from the leg, as I learned, so I was careful to wear smart shoes and keep them always clean and in good repair. I became a crank about my hose, too. They were good quality, sheer and securely anchored. I always adjusted the seams with the aid of a full length mirror, to give straight-up-and-down line, on the back of the leg,—instead of following the arc that nature bestowed.

As you say, dress lengths are very important. My figure proportions were such, however, that a hem length which stopped at the middle of the calf seemed to accentuate my bow legs. A dress long enough to cover the knee, but not so long that it extended down to mid-calf, gave a better general effect. I found that flared and full skirts were especially flattering. And a graceful carriage is a great help. For informal dances, I wore lightweight open sandals with low heels, which were wonderfully comfortable and called attention to a dainty foot. In this case, the low heels did not give an unattractive appearance to my legs,—the difference being in the cut of the shoe. Oxfords are clumsy looking at best.

When a young girl thinks she has a problem, she does have one,—while the idea persists. I can still remember how miserably unhappy I was about my bow legs, until, with the passage of time, the problem began to seem infinitesimal. Today, I am so busy with other things that the only complaint I have to make about my legs is that they don't get me places fast enough. Sincerely, MRS. M. A. T.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain

This is another of a series of articles by Ida Jean Kain in which she describes a physical fitness program for women during wartime. Today: the muscular girdle and the importance of keeping it in condition.

The middle-aged spread has nothing to do with age. You can get it at 20, or skip it at 50. What makes the difference is the condition of your muscular girdle.

You ought to know about this girdle. Nature designed it and it has a three-way control. To balance each other and give you the best possible support the muscles run in different directions.

There are long, narrow muscles running the full length of the mid-section from withbone to pelvis. Then, a set of broad muscles come in on the sides. And for good measure, underneath are layers of other muscles.

This network of muscles forms the abdominal wall, and from the standpoint of fitness as well as your figure it is most important to keep them in good tone. Otherwise they take on fat and spread like the strands of a mesh shopping bag.

You need to keep these supporting muscles on their job of holding the abdominal organs in place. In fact, this is the one type of exercise that no woman can get along without. If you are reducing your weight, you must strengthen these muscles to prevent sagging of the organs as weight is removed. Or, if you are trying to gain, you must exercise to prevent too many pounds from settling about the midriff. You tell, this girls particularly need exercise to keep the muscular girdle in tone.

Just a few exercises, taken every day, will strengthen all the sets of muscles that make up your girdle and will give you a nice firm feeling through the midsection. The two most effective positions for this kind of exercise are: Lying on your back on the floor with knees flexed and feet on floor. And lying on back on floor

It's About Time

By Dolores Boland

IT'S ABOUT TIME to remove that touch-of-white from last spring's black dress. Replace with touches of black velvet and you will have a smart little number for this fall. Consider a rounded collar and fake-pocket flaps (also rounded) with feet elevated on chair seat or low bench to counteract gravity.

From the first position, simply pull up and in with the lower abdominal muscles and press the small of the back down against the floor. Hold, relax. Repeat 10 times. This also helps to overcome sway back.

From the same position, keep the knees flexed and raise alternate thighs to chest. While doing this, keep one foot on floor to prevent any possible strain.

As a third exercise from that position, raise alternate legs straight up in air, knee straight, to right angle with trunk. Again, as you swing one leg up, keep the other foot on the floor.

'This Is the Army' Seat Sale Opens Today; Earle Roxettes Join the Bond Boosters; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

AT A ROUGH GUESS, the line should be about a mile long and represent a good many thousand dollars. It ought to be there all day, inching its way along, laying its money on the barrelhead and coming away with an equivalent value in pasteboard.

IRVING BERLIN

Which is to say that the seat sale for Irving Berlin's all-soldier show, "This Is the Army," opens this morning at 9 o'clock in the Civilian Defense Volunteer Booth, diagonally opposite the National Theater on Post Square, against the opening of the two-week engagement at the National, Tuesday night, September 22.

To refresh the memory, there will be matinees on Wednesday and Saturday of each week, with an extra performance Sunday night, October 4. Uncle Sam, who has supplied a cast of 300 soldiers from virtually every military post, is the producer. All proceeds go to Army Emergency Relief. Mail orders will not be accepted. To get your tickets, you will have to be in that line. Prices for the opening night range from $2.20 to $16.50. Evenings thereafter the scale will run from $1.65 to $5.50, with the matinees tariffed at $1.10 to $3.30.

Irving Berlin, who wrote "This Is the Army" as a successor to his World War I show, "Yip, Yip, Yaphank," is responsible for the entire score, which is reputedly, and on the evidence of the loudspeakers, packed with song hits. He also appears in the production in a special scene from "Yaphank," along with several other veterans of the other war and earlier musical.

By the time it opens here, "This Is the Army" will have grossed something like $800,000, principally from the boxoffice of the Broadway Theater in New York, where it has played to capacity at every performance since its opening July 4, but in part from the $250,000 down payment the Warner Brothers made for the motion picture rights, all profits from the film also to go to Army Emergency Relief.

Now will you get in that line?

This Irving Berlin fellow will be pretty prevalent in the Capital by the time "This Is the Army" gets under way at the National. Mark Sandrich's production of "Holiday Inn," I hope it will be recalled, is coming to the screen at Loew's Palace as soon as the smoke from Clark Gable's and Lana Turner's kisses in "Somewhere I'll Find You" clears away. Berlin wrote and composed that one, too. When they both get going, the lad will be fairly bogged down with honors, just as he was in New York, where they made his name dominant on Broadway.

Roxettes Rally to the Call

Not to be outdone by the Dorothy Lamours, Hedy Lamarrs, Greer Garsons and other beauties of the screen who have pitched in and sold prodigious numbers of War Bonds, the 16 Earle Theater Roxettes today will come around to the front of the theater and take their places among the active bond saleswomen. The girls will take time out from their daily professional duties to sell bonds and stamps between the hours of 4:45 and 5:30 and 8 and 9 p. m. They will be dressed in attractive military costumes and not only will sell the bonds, but deliver them in person to the purchasers later in the week. During the sales sessions, at a long table in front of the Earle, a bit of musical embellishment will enliven the proceedings, with Frank Covello, pianist and accordionist in the Earle orchestra, supplying the entertainment. One suspects that tickets for "Yankee Doodle Dandy" will be on sale somewhere around there, too. If you don't buy a bond on your way in, you will on the way out.

An organization meeting of the publicity committee of the American Theater Wing Stage Door Canteen in Washington is scheduled for 5 o'clock this afternoon in the Hays-Adams House. Things are bustling around the Belasco Theater these days and it's time we all went to work. Watson Barratt, famous scenic designer already has. Mr. Barratt designed the decor of the local canteen and has made several recent trips to Washington to supervise the execution of his designs which are in course of being installed. Those who have seen the sketches describe them as both amusing and decorative. Mr. Barratt, incidentally, designed the sets for Eddie Dowling's production of Chesterton's "Magic," opening in the National Theater tonight.

At the instigation of Sidney Lust, Maryland State chairman for the War Activities Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, Prince Georges County has organized a committee to further the sale of war bonds during the billion-dollar September drive. T. Howard Duckett heads a committee of 50 civic and business leaders, which will stage a giant bond rally in Ritchie Stadium, University of Maryland, on Thursday night, September 24, at 8 o'clock. Screen stars, in person, vaudeville and radio acts and music by the Washington Gas Light Band will feature the occasion.

That old wheelhorse among the bibulous "temperance dramas" that have survived since P. T. Barnum's time, will open tomorrow night as the next "Gay Nineties" production by the Willard Roof Players, under the direction of Richard Midgely. It will introduce several new faces among the established cast of favorites. Laurel Sheppard arrives from New York to play the part of the drunkard's harassed wife and Elida Cooper, another newcomer, will appear as the dozing mother. She goes to Heaven in Act I, but comes right back again to sing in the entr'acte solo! And Mimi Norion also will take part in the song-and-dance specialties, along with Helen Auld and others of native note. The bulk of the cast remains unchanged.

Signs-of-the-Times Note

There is an inescapable fan-it-with-your-hat suggestion in the downtown window-sign that says, "Air-Cooled Lucheons." Chile con carne, no doubt.

Trans-Lux

Two particularly good reasons for attending the Trans-Lux Theater this week are the thrilling pictures in the newsreels of the Marines' attack and capture of the Solomon Islands and an 8-minute short entitled "Tulips Shall Grow"—about as fascinating and pleasing as any staged short presentation ever seen here.

Other highlight flashes in the news are the President's message on inflation, accompanied by a highly interesting and informing analysis of the problem; a survivor telling the dramatic story of the fire aboard, and the rescue of passengers and crew from the former S. S. Manhattan; a section of Rome's troops, now prisoners; Yank troops parading in London; Ted Schroeder winning the National Amateur Tennis Championship; and the "Miss America" beauty contest in Atlantic City.

In the Kallenborn film, the three answered questions are: 1. Why not an A. E. F. in China? 2. How can the Government pay $25 for bonds in 10 years, if it is broke? Will the dollars be inflated paper? 3. What have the United Nations accomplished in three years? The title of Tex McCrary's subject is "Howard Hughes, Mystery Man." In "Hands of Victory" are seen the palms of our political and Army leaders, and lines of victory shown thereon. They are shown to be absent from the palms of Hitler, Mussolini and Hirochito. Finally there is "Canvas Cut-Ups," burlesquing modern wrestling, and this is very truthfully a "Wow."

Sophie Tuckers 'Em Out!

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 13. That whirlwind dervish of energy and activity, Sophie Tucker, has opened in San Francisco—and what an opening!

SOPHIE TUCKER

They're down in Palm Springs resting up.

Sophie has booked herself solidly for one year. When I asked her why she didn't play here, she said, "Ho hum. They don't pay my kind of dough in Hollywood."

I don't wonder the boys in the Tank Corps stationed at Indio went mad when Dinah Shore dropped in for an unheralded visit.

Now that Eddie Mannix has bought that $100,000 home across from Jack Benny, in Beverly, does that mean marriage?

Just saw "Holiday Inn" and Marjorie Reynolds. She's got the greatest chance for stardom of any youngster who's come along in years. If you can sing with Bing Crosby and dance with Fred Astaire, you've got something. She's got it. She's the best partner Astaire's had since Ginger Rogers.

And best of all, her unhappiness is behind her, after fighting her way thru westerns, dancing school, and poverty row. Imagine her feelings on her first trip to New York, being featured with Fred and Bing, and introduced by Irving Berlin. She's got her feet on the ground, and her head screwed on the right way.

Pat O'Brien and Max Baer have taken up knitting, as a result of watching Jane Wyton knit on the "Navy Comes Through" set. They learned it wasn't a lady's pastime and might be very helpful. I'll say!

Broadway Bulletins

New York, Sept. 13. W. R. Willis, who published Japan News-Week and was C. B. S. correspondent in Tokyo, told this story at the Overseas Press Club. When he was arrested on December 7 he didn't know that the war already had begun. "I've gotta make my broadcast," he shouted to the policeman. In jail, he refused to answer any questions "until you first permit me to make my scheduled broadcast to the States." They removed his tie and suspenders, explaining: "We know that in your country prisoners use such things to hang themselves." But they permitted him to send for a 10-foot oboe, or sash, with which to keep his trousers up. At his "trial" he heard a Jap make a 15-minute speech. "Who's that?" Willis asked. "Your lawyer," he was told. "He just admitted your guilt."

Gene Fowler revealed this Barrymore incident which occurred while the late star was in the hospital. A noted movie producer tried to see Barrymore, but was refused admittance for three days. He finally managed to be brought into the patient's room. "Why didn't you want to see me?" he asked. "For three reasons," Barrymore explained. "One—you're a producer, which means you're a noncreative peasant. Two—I couldn't get any pleasure out of embracing you. And three—you weren't delivering liquor."

Shortly before the Gypsy Rose Lee-Alexander Kirkland wedding, the strip-teaser looked around the room at the assembled guests. She noticed that they all were dressed in conservative fashion—all, except one pretty lady who was wearing a low-cut evening gown. Gypsy walked to her side and asked: "What's the idea? Who are you?" "I," the lady informed, "am the minister's wife."

John Goette was one of the newspaper correspondents who returned on the Gripsholm. He had been interned in Peking with a group of United States Marines. The Marines towered over the squat lone Jap sentry assigned to guarding them and they constantly teased him. One of them criticized the way the Jap was carrying his rifle and bayonet. "Get me a broomstick handle and I'll show you," the Marine challenged. The Jap supplied the broomstick handle, they fenced, and the Marine disarmed him. The next day the sentry was further distressed. He had fallen asleep and when he awoke he discovered that the Marines had taken his rifle apart—and he couldn't reassemble it.

At the Information Please Jambores for Army Relief, which will be held Armistice Eve at the Capitol Theater, one of the features will be John Kieran as a one-man Board of Experts. The purchaser of the movie rights to "Life With Father" also must agree to do the picture in Technicolor, to show off the red hair of the six day characters. Russell Crouse, coauthor of the play, for which $500,000 is being asked—also is asking $50,000 for the services of his red-haired cat. "It's not for myself, but for the cat," he vows. "They can pay the $50,000 in liver."

Last week "Tobacco Road" was performed at Mitchell Field, unenclosed. In the cast were Jim Barton, who hadn't played the role in three years; Margaret Wyckoff, who last played it five years ago; Pat. Fred Herrick, who played it in the original company seven years ago; and Ruth Hunt, who has had two children since she last played the role of Ellie Mae. The Atlantic Monthly soon will begin publishing installments from Clifford Odets' personal daily Journal. No. Noel Coward's mother, who flew back to England, cabled John C. Wilson, the producer: "Go right out and get me some hair nets. I can't get them here. And you wouldn't want me to look like a banshee, would you?" Mrs. Coward is 83. Wilson sent her the hair nets.

Robert Lewis, who directed "My Heart's in the Highlands," just completed his first picture as a dialogue director. "The cast is very British," he reported. "How do you know?" Lewis was asked. "Well," he replied, "all the girls' names are Heather." Charles MacArthur, the playwright, sat at a table with Victor Mature and listened to Mature philosophizing about the American Theater. MacArthur listened silently for one whole hour, then punched Mature in the eye and departed.

Rich Girl-Poor Girl

CHAPTER XIX

ROSE said hastily, "What about the school job?" She smiled a little as she said it. Jonathan found himself awkward under that smile. He replied testily:

"Oh, routine stuff of course. I suppose you knew it would be. After all, the seasonal physical examinations took place long before the job came my way... there doesn't seem much to do. I consult with the school nurse, I make my reports. I assume that I'll look the boys over before track and baseball season."

Rose said, after a moment:

"In other towns, bigger ones than this, of course, yet not very large at that, it's a full time job. Their men go between the various schools, maintain an office and have no outside practice. But here, to be frank, it's always been more or less of a sinecure. Still," she went on earnestly, "there are things you could do, Jon... new things... new, that is, to Riverport."

He looked away uncomfortably. After a minute, he said:

"I've tried, Rose. I wanted to give a series of talks, hygiene, sex education... of course, to the ages... one for the older children in the grade schools, another for the high school classes. I buzzed around and saw people—and was told to lay off. I was told they get all they need in the regular way in their courses and that the parents would object seriously to a more detailed, more adult exposition... So that's that. It simply can't be done, not in Riverport at any rate."

"No," agreed Rose, "I don't suppose it can."

He didn't exactly like her tone. Her tone said: You have the job, if you want to you can force the issue. You can call a meeting of the school board and put your views to them forcibly. You can make them see...

He argued: "I've talked to Sutton. He deplores the narrow-minded attitude of the board and the parents and many of the teachers. And I must agree with him that there's nothing to be done at present. Maybe we can bring 'em to it by education."

Rose said slowly, "Of course, if you've talked with Sutton, there's no more to be said."

A Quarrel Is Barely Averted

"Oh, Rose," cried Jonathan, in real despair and sickening suddenly at the very name, the name which kept cropping up to ruin all their friendly conversations, their sense of congenial companionship. "Please don't let's quarrel... If it weren't for you," he added, "I couldn't stick it out here. I'd be so desperately lonely!"

She smiled at him, then. She said gently, "I'm glad you feel that way about me, Jon."

"Rose," he said, after a minute. "I haven't the least right to ask you this, but are you engaged to Bill Lynd?"

"No," replied Rose steadily. "I'm not engaged to anyone."

She got to her feet and went toward the door. She said, over her shoulder, "And I don't want to be."

At the door, she called her mother. "How about those doughnuts?" and Mrs. Ward appeared almost instantly with a heaped plate of fresh fried doughnuts and a pot of coffee.

"You get the cups," she told Rose, as Jonathan came forward to relieve her of her pleasant burden.

He thought, well, she warned me, well enough; keep off dangerous ground. She could have let the doughnuts wait a moment.

After he had gone home Rose went upstairs to bed. Her mother fussed around putting things away, straightening up the room. Presently she would come to Rose's bedroom and put her through the usual maternal cross-examination which, however subtly presented, never failed to be forthcoming at the end of an evening during which Rose had had a caller. For a few minutes however Rose would be alone and free to think her own thoughts.

She sat down at the dressing table, put her chin in her cupped hands and regarded her reflection. She said to herself, He isn't in love with Sally. Not yet. He's dazzled, that's all, poor infant. He isn't in love with me. Not yet. He's just lonely. But—

Her mother coming upstairs a few minutes later was astonished to hear her child declaim in a loud firm tone of voice, "I could, of course, fight her with her own weapons. That's what they tell you to do. But I'd hate it really—hate it if he doesn't really care."

"What on earth?" asked Mrs. Ward, entering the room.

Rose turned scarlet. She said, and laughed at herself, "Oh, nothing. Did you think I'd lost my mind? I was just—just reading aloud."

Mrs. Ward was no longer interested. It didn't occur to her to ask the name of the book or to look for the volume itself. And Rose, her color subsiding once more breathed freely. That was, she told herself severely, one of the narrowest escapes she had ever experienced.

Spring in North Country

Spring comes slowly to the North. It is a true transition. It is not in the least the spring of more southerly climates, a falling in love at first sight, an alteration over night. It is more like the love which follows friendship, which waits, which weighs, shy, a little reluctant, a little cool, but how magnificent when it comes. In May the roads were still rutted, and back of the camps along the river's edge ice was in the gullies. But the sky was a flawless blue and the brooks and streams were swollen with the fresh running of water.

Jonathan's own garden began to show its first color. He knew next to nothing about gardens. It was Rose who came along after school and raked and pruned and tidied. Often he would not see her except to wave through the windows and then when a patient permitted, to see her, her gloved hands sternly wielding shears, a silly little tam partly covering her bright hair, a consciously shabby skirt and sweater adorning her slender figure.

Sally had been away for a time. She did not return to Riverport until early in June. One night, after dinner in the house on the Hill, she had suddenly announced that she was bored, that she could scream with boredom and that it was indicated that she take a trip to New York and buy some clothes. She added firmly, "Lots of clothes... what's your favorite color, Kim?"

"Color?" repeated Jonathan vaguely. "Oh, I dunno. Any color as long as it's blue—or pink," he added.

Sally laughed.

"Marvelous imagination!" She stopped laughing. Her penciled, delicate eyebrows drew together. She said abruptly, "I've had an invitation to cruise during the summer... why I haven't accepted I can't fathom. It must be lovely. She grinned at him implacably. After a while she said, "Well, it won't be so bad. We can have our fun. The Country Club, the island; I hope you're in trim for a terrifically social summer."

The Disagreement Over Pete's Condition

The next day she had left town. Jonathan missed her, but not too much. He was fairly busy, he was up to his ears in a row with the athletic director at the high school. Examining the track and baseball candidates, he had discerned a cardiac weakness in their best track man, a lanky, nervous, long-legged boy who had done a good deal during the past two years to keep up the Riverport record at the interscholastic meets.

The athletic director had told him flatly that he was an alarmist. And going over his head, had called the boy's family physician. That old gentleman, a quiet, pleasant, doddering person, had shaken his head gravely at the report of a colleague. He couldn't, he said, agree at all. To be sure, Pete was growing rapidly—he came of a family of 6-footers. But there was nothing wrong with him, nothing at all. A little over-trained, perhaps, and growing pains.

"There are no such things as growing pains!" said Jonathan, annoyed.

In the end he went to the boy's parents. And Pete was withdrawn from active athletics. The coolness emanating from the athletic director, Pete's doctor and other interested people became perfectly apparent to Jonathan. He spoke of it to Senator Sutton when that gentleman stopped in to take him up to the club for a golf match one afternoon.

Sutton shook his head, too. He said, "I'm on your side, of course, Jonathan—can't have that contretemps repeated, you know."

Jonathan went on smoothly, leaning back in the car, "But you said yourself this wasn't serious. I mean, it was something he'd outgrow and—"

"He'll outgrow it all right," agreed Jonathan darkly, "provided he takes some care of himself at this stage and doesn't start trying to run around a track and beat others to the tape. He has a history of scarlet fever. He's growing fast. His heart can't stand an extra strain at this time. That's all."

"Of course," said the Senator soothingly, "I wouldn't have anything happen for the world. Naturally, it's better to lean backwards in such a case. Even if you get the reputation of being an alarmist," he murmured, "only it's a damned shame. Pete's half our claim to glory."

Jonathan said shortly, "I'm not interested in glory."

Trick Seen As Axis Puppets Berate Reich

New York, Sept. 13.—Nazi puppet officials in Holland and Belgium have begun to denounce Hitler's "new order," possibly as part of a trick to lay the groundwork for a peace offensive, the Netherlands information bureau reported tonight.

A dispatch to the bureau from Dr. M. R. C. Blankenstein, noted Dutch writer in London, said these defiant statements included an expression of "no confidence in Hitler" by a Belgian-Fascist paper, a Dutch editorial upholding the Netherlands government in London, and an outburst against "German imperialism" by Anton Mussert, leader of the Dutch Nazis.

"The bafflement," wrote, "lies in the fact that such utterances usually invoke a death penalty. Here the responsible authors have not been punished—not even rebuked."

Old Trick Seen

Observers in London believe these puppets are resorting to the old trick of implying that Germany is not an enemy of freedom and that she might be amenable to peace offers, Blankenstein said.

He believed the action might also be intended to abate unrest in occupied territories in the face of an Allied second front threat. Some consideration was given to the possibility of friction among the high council groups of the Reich.

Blankenstein said these outbursts obviously have German approval. Mussert and others involved have always been "tools" with a blind obedience to Hitler, he said.

"If proof were needed," he said, "Mussert's speech was even carried by the Nazi-controlled Hilversum radio. In this speech Mussert asserted he was 'opposed to a return of all the German people into the Reich' and then added, 'Versailles was unable to destroy Germany but there has been no enemy since the Spanish wars who has been able to subject the Netherlands.'"

Also strange, according to Blankenstein, was the failure of the press and radio, which normally was forced to cover this Dutch quisling extensively, to mention the speech at the time. Three weeks later it was published in Mussert's organ Volk en Vaderland and broadcast over Hilversum.

Similar Incident in Belgium

A similar development occurred in Belgium, he said, when "Le Mays Reel"—controlled paper of Leon Degrelle, Belgian Nazi puppet, opened with an equally defiant challenge. It said:

"We refuse to believe in the magnanimity of Europe's leaders. If they find we agree with everything they do and bless the hand that strikes us—they will not take our aspirations into consideration."

Rounding out this picture of German puppets denouncing their masters with impunity, the Nazi-controlled Dutch newspaper De Telegraaf, commenting on the execution of five Dutch hostages on August 15, contained enough material to give the author a death sentence "several times over," Blankenstein asserted.

"The newspaper taking it for granted that its readers listened to the Netherlands broadcasts from London, appealed to the Dutch to obey instructions from London as part of their duty," he said. The London radio had asked the Dutch to refrain from such sabotage as caused the shooting of the hostages, and to wait for the proper moment for an uprising in Europe.

"A more striking challenge to the German occupier is hardly conceivable. His decrees are openly flaunted and to crown the insult, the Netherlands government in London is upheld as the true authority."

"There is no evidence from reports received that the Gestapo has taken action of any kind."

Policeman Dies Of Injuries in Fall at Hedge

Policeman Wilbur B. Slack, 33, of 4313 Brandywine Street Northwest, attached to the Eighth Precinct, died at Georgetown Hospital yesterday of injuries suffered last Thursday when he tripped over a wicket concealed in a hedge.

Off duty and accompanied by Policeman Dudley P. Dungan, also of No. 8, Slack was preparing to enter an apartment building at 3221 Connecticut Avenue Northwest. He had parked his automobile on Macomb Street and jumped the hedge as a short cut to the apartment house entrance.

Dungan took him to Georgetown Hospital, where an emergency operation was performed for a ruptured stomach.

Slack, a former Marine and one-time Texas border patrolman, joined the Metropolitan Police in July, 1940, and was just promoted to third-class private last July. He was a crack pistol shot fellow officers stated.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Alice Slack of Brownville, Tex.

British Raze Desert Base of Indian Freebooters

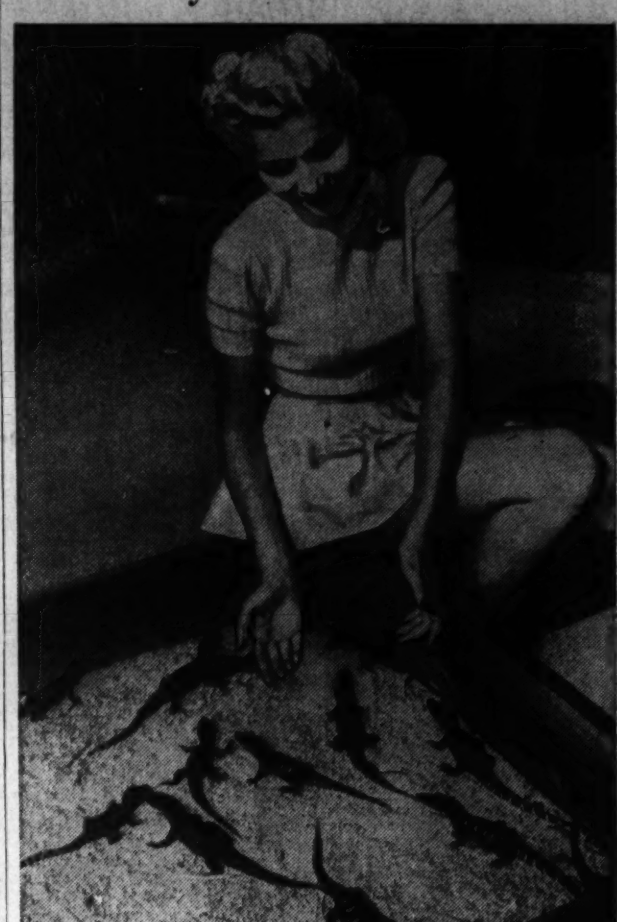

Karachi, India, Sept. 13 (P).—The desert stronghold of the Hurs, freebooters of Sind Province, has been razed and their leader, Pir of Pagara, has been taken into custody by the British in a government drive to stamp out the organization.

Pir's fortress palace at Pirjogoth, surrounded by walls 60 feet high and 12 feet thick, including his residential palaces, harems and luxurious baths, have been blown up.

The town's population was evacuated before the demolition began. The mosque and other religious structures were left standing.

The Hurs have been terrorizing Sind Province by attacks on trains and villages. Martial law was declared in June. Since then 96 Hurs have been hanged.

Haruna Was Sunk by 'Dream' Shots, Bombardier Hero Says

New York, Sept. 13.—The sinking of the battleship Haruna off the Philippines last December was a "bombardier's dream," Sgt. Meyer Levin, bombardier on the Flying Fortress piloted by Capt. Colin P. Kelly, said today in a broadcast description of the action.

Sgt. Levin of Brooklyn, already holder of the Distinguished Flying Cross, has just been awarded the Silver Star for gallantry. In a broadcast on the Australian radio, heard here by C. B. S. Levin told for the first time just what went on inside Captain Kelly's bomber during this now historic attack on the big warship.

"It was what you might call a bombardier's dream," he said. "We were on the way searching for a Japanese aircraft carrier. We searched for two hours but found no trace of it. However, in the Jap convoy was a battleship protecting landing operations and we made this our target."

"There was a terrific amount of antiaircraft fire coming up at us as we approached. It was being thrown up by the battleship and the rest of the convoy; most of it just below us."

"We were flying at 22,000 feet, but these Flying Fortresses are built for the job."

"We were almost straight in front of the target. Fifteen seconds before I released the bombs I knew I was going to hit the ship. . . . I saw them hit. What a hit! The first one opened up the starboard side, the second hit her near the funnel and the third landed just over the port side."

"The next time I took a look at her she was really blazing. I knew then it was the Haruna. Black thick smoke was pouring out and there was a big patch of oil spreading from the sides."

Levin told of the bomber's loss on the way home. Captain Kelly was killed when the ship exploded after he had ordered his men to bail out. Levin and four others came down safely.
